TRÜBNERS ORIENTAL SERIES

POPULAR RE-ISSUE AT A UNIFORM PRICE

Demy 8vo, dark green cloth, gilt, Each 7s. 6d. net

- ALBERUNI: India. An Account of the Religion, Philosophy, Literature, Geography, Chronology, Astronomy, Customs, Laws, and Astrology of India, about A.D. 1030. By Dr. EDWARD C. SACHAU.
- BARTH (Dr. A.): The Religions of India. Authorised Translation by Rev. J. Wood.
- BIGANDET (B. P.): Life or Legend of Gaudama, the Buddha of the Burmese; with Annotations, the Ways to Neibban, and Notice on the Phongyies or Burmese Monks.
- BEAL (Prof. S.): Life of Hiuen-Tsiang. By the Shamans HWUI LI and YEN-TSUNG. With a Preface containing an Account of the Works of I-Tsing.
- COWELL (Prof. E. B.): Sarva-Darsana-Samgraha; or, Review of the Different Systems of Hindu Philosophy. By MADHAVA ACHARYA. Translated by Prof. E. B. COWELL, M.A., and Prof. A. E. GOUGH, M.A.
- DOWSON (Prof. J.): Classical Dictionary of Hindu Mythology and Religion, Geography, History, and Literature.
- WEBER (Dr. A.): History of Indian Literature. Translated by John Mann, M.A., and Theodore Zachariae, Ph.D. Fourth Edition.

Other Volumes to follow.

LONDON

KEGAN PAUL, TRENCH, TRÜBNER & CO. LTD.

THE

LIFE OF HIUEN-TSIANG

m tiir

SHAMAN HWUI LI

BITH AN INTRODUCTION CONTAINING AN ACCOUNT OF THE BOOKS OF LITSING

Ħ١

SAMUEL BEAL, BA, DCL

WITH A PRIPACE BY L CRANMER-BYNG

POPULAR I DITION

LONDON

KIGAN PAUL, TRENCH, TRUBNER & CO LTD BROADWAY HOUSE 68 74 CARTER LANE, L C New Edition, 1911 Popular Re-issue, 1914

The rights of translation and of reproduction are reserved

PREFACE

CENTURE Leftere Livering a became in Liviness Jacfore the permilloss of Royal matrix ex and forgotten courte aus cltaned a "market value" the writing of the Marter a life In some cleans ed disciple was lith an act of love and pety in the lar line. The very feetprints of the farners dead because les mons and their shadows shone in dark cases that once withheld them from the world Menors Iccling lack viewed them through a golden Investiles were inerged at last in ancient annlight, they nere cludes of God rated in the tangled ferests of time In this sourit then, the man of compassionate feeling (at ch as the rendering of the Sancert Shama), the Shaman He tielt took up his tallets and wrete the life of Hinen-True The Master 1ad already written his immortal Si valla or Record of Western Countries, yet the eixteen years of that wonderful quest in far-off India of cities seen and shrines sinted, of strange peoples and stranger customs cannot be crowded into one brief record. And to we watch the patient disciple waiting on those intervals of I issue when the task of translation from Sauscrit into Chine e is laid aside, when the long routine of a Buddlust day is ended, maiting for the impressions of a wandering soul in the birthland of its faith. The Lafe is supplement to the Record What is obscure or half told in the one is made clear in the other

Hwui-li begins in the true Chinese manner with a grand pedigree of his here, tracing his descent from the I imperor Hwang Ti, the mythical Heavenly Emperor This zeal for following the remotest ancestors over the borders of history into the regions of fable may be largely ascribed to a very human desire to connect the stream of life with its divine source. We are chiefly concerned to know that he came of a family which had already given notable men to the State, and was launched "in the troublous whirl of birth and death" but a little distance from the town of Kou-Shih, in the province of Honan, in the year 600 A.D. Here and there biography leaves us a glimpse of his outward appearance as boy and man. are told that "at his opening life he was rosy as the evening vapours and round as the rising moon. As a boy he was sweet as the odour of cinnamon or the vanilla tree." A soberer style does justice to his prime, and again he comes before us, "a tall handsome man with beautiful eyes and a good complexion. He had a serious but benevolent expression and a sedate, rather stately manner." The call of the West came early to Hiuen-Tsiang. From a child he had easily outstripped his fellows in the pursuit of knowledge, and with the passing of the years he stepped beyond the narrow limits of Chinese Buddhism and found the deserts of Turkestan between him and the land of his dreams. Imperfect translations from the Sanscrit, the limited intelligence of the Chinese priesthood, the sense of vast truths dimly perceived obscurely set forth, the leaven of his first Confucian training-all contributed to the making of a Buddhist pilgrim. The period of his departure, 629 A.D., was an eventful one for T'ai-Tsung, the most powerful figure of the brilliant Tang dynasty, sat on the throne of his father Kaotsu, the founder of the line. The nomad Tartars, so long the terror of former dynasties, succumbed to his military genius, and Kashgaria was made a province of the Empire. Already the kingdom of Tibet was tottering to its fall, and Corea was to know the devastation of war within her boundaries. Ch'ang-an was now the capital, a city of floating pavilions and secluded gardens, destined to become the centre of n literary movement that would leave its mark for all time. But the days were not yet when the terraces of Teng-hiang-ting would see the butterflies alight on the flower-crowned locks of Yang-kuei-fei, or the green vistas re-echo to the voices of poet and emporor joined in praise of her. Only two wandering monks emerge furtively through the enter gates of the city's triple walls, and one of them looks back for a glimpso of Ch'ang-an, the last for eixteen oventful years of oxile.

Others had crossed the frontier before him, notably Pa-hian and Sung Yan, others in due course would come and go, leaving to posterity their impressions of a changing world, but this man stands alone, a prince of pligrims, a very Bayard of Buddhist enthusiasm, fearless and without repreach. As we read on through the pages of Hwui-li the fascination of the Master of the Law becomes clear to us, not suddenly, but with the long, ardness miles that mark the way to India and the journey home.

Take the Master's tattered robes, let the winds of Gobi whistle through your sleeve and cut you to the bone. moont his rusty red mag and set your face to the West. In the night you will see "firelights as many as stars" raised by the demons and goblins; travelling at dawn you will behold "soldiers clad in for and felt and the appearance of camels and horsemen and the glittering of standards and lances; fresh forms and figures changing into n thousand shapes, sometimes at an immeuse distance. then close at hand, then vanished into the void." The time comes when oven the old red steed avails not, the Great Ico Mountains loom in front of you, and you crawl like an ant and cling like a fly to the roof of the world. Then on the topmost summit, still far away from the promised land, you realiso two things-the littleness of human life, the greatness of one indomitable soul.

But the superman is also very human. With the vast bulk of his encyclopædic knowledge he falls on the pretentious monk Mokshagupta, he flattens him and treads a stately if heavy measure on his prostrate body. And withal clear-sighted and intolerant of shams, he is still a child of his age and religion. With childish curiosity he tempts a bone to foretell the future, and with childish delight obtains the answer he most desires. In the town of Hiddha is Buddha's skull bone, one foot long, two "If anyone wishes to know the indications inches round. of his guilt or his religious merit he mixes some powdered incense into a paste, which he spreads upon a piece of silken stuff, and then presses it on the top of the bone: according to the resulting indications the good fortune or ill fortune of the man is determined." Hiven obtains the impression of a Bôdhi and is overjoyed, for, as the guardian Brahman of the bone explains, "it is a sure sign of your having a portion of true wisdom (Bôdhi)." another time he plays a kind of religious quoits by flinging garlands of flowers on the sacred image of Buddha, which, being caught on its hands and arms, show that his desires will be fulfilled. In simple faith he tells Hwui-li how Buddha once cleaned his teeth and flung the fragments of the wood with which he performed the act on the ground; how they took root forthwith, and how a tree seventy feet high was the consequence. And Hiuen saw that tree, therefore the story must be true.

But it is not with the pardonable superstitions of a human soul of long ago that we need concern ourselves. The immense latent reserve, the calm strength to persist, is the appeal. It comes to us with no note of triumph for the thing accomplished or the obstacle removed, but rather underlies some simple statement of fact and is summed up in these few trite words: "We advanced guided by observing the bones left on the way." The little incidents of life and death are as nothing to one who looks on all men as ghosts haunted by reality. And so the Master of the Law resigns himself to the prospect of n violent end at the hands of the river pirates of the Ganges, to the miraculous interposition of a timely storm, with the same sevenity with which be meets the long procession streaming out of Nålanda in his honour, with its two hundred priests and some thousand lay patrons who surround him to his entry, recounting his praises, and carrying standards, umbrellas, flowers, and perfumes.

Yet there are moments of sheer delight when seemes of physical beauty are fair enough to draw even a Buddhist mould from his philosophic calm, when even a Biddhist mould from his philosophic calm, when even flinen-Tsiang must have become lyrical in the presence of his recording disciple. Who would not be the guest of the abbot of Nalanda monastery with its six wings, each built by a king, all enclosed in the privacy of solid brick? "One gate opens into the great college, from which are reparated eight other halls, standing in the middle (of the monastery). The richly adorned towers, and the fairy-like turrets, like pointed hilltops, are congregated together. The observatories seem to be lest in the mists (of the morning), and the upper rooms tower above the clouds.

"From the windows one may see how the winds and the clouds predece new forms, and above the scaring caves the conjunctions of the sun and moon may be observed.

"And then we may add how the deep, translucent ponds bear on their surface the hine letus intermingled with the Kanaka flower, of deep red colour, and at intervals the Anna groves spread over all, their shade.

"All the outside courts, in which are the priests' chambers, are of four stages. The stages have dragon-projections and colonred caves, the penri-red pillnrs, carved and orn-mented, the richly adoracd balustrades, and the roofs covered with tiles that reflect the light in a thousand shades, these things add to the beauty of the scene."

Here ten thousand priests sought refuge from the world of passing phenomena and the lure of the senses.

Wherever our pilgrim goes he finds traces of a worship far older than Buddhism. He does not tell us so in so many words, yet underneath the many allusions to Bôdhitrees and Nagas we may discover the traces of that primitive tree and serpent worship that still exists in remote corners of India, as, for instance, among the Naga tribes of Manipur who worship the python they have killed. In Hiuen's time every lake and fountain had its Nāga-râja or serpent-king. Buddha himself, as we learn from both the Si-yu-ki and the Life, spent much time converting or subduing these ancient gods. There were Nagas both good and evil. When Buddha first sought enlightenment he sat for seven days in a state of contemplation by the waters of a little woodland lake. Then this good Naga "kept guard over Tathagata; with his folds seven times round the body of the Buddha, he caused many heads to appear, which overshadowed him as a parasol; therefore to the east of this lake is the dwelling of the Naga." In connection with this legend it is interesting to remember that Vishnu is commonly represented as reposing in contemplation on the sevenheaded snake. Even after the passing of the Buddha the Nāgas held their local sway, and King Asoka is foiled in his attempt to destroy the Naga's stûpa, for, "having seen the character of the place, he was filled with fear and said, 'All these appliances for worship are unlike anything seen by men.' The Nāga said, 'If it be so, would that the king would not attempt to destroy the stupa!' The king, seeing that he could not measure his power with that of the Nāga, did not attempt to open the stûpa (to take out the relics)." In many instances we find the serpent gods not merely in full possession of their ancient hannts, but actually posing as the allies and champions of the new faith and its founder. In the Si-yu-ki we are told that "by the side of a pool where Tathagata washed his garments is a great square stone on which are yet to he seen the trace-marks of his robe. . . . The faithful and pure frequently come to make their offerings here; hut when the heretics and men of oril mind speak lightly of or insult the stone, the dragon-king (Naga-raja) inhahiting the pool causes the winds to rise and rain to fall."

The connection between Buddhism and tree-worship is even closer still. The figure of the Master is for ever reclining under the Bodhi-tree beneath whose shade he dreamed that he had "the earth for his bod, the Himalayes for his pillow, while his loft arm reached to the Eastern Ocean, his right to the Western Ocean, and his feet to the great South Sea." This Bodhi-tree is the Ficus Religiosa or peepul tree, and is also known as Rarasvit or the tree of wisdom and knowledge. The leaves are heart-shaped, slender and pointed, and constantly univering. In the Si-wu-ki it is stated of a certain Bôdhi-tree that although the leaves withor not either in winter or summer, but remain shining and glistening throughout the year, yet "at every successive Nirvana-day (of the Buddhas) the leaves wither and fall, and then in a moment revive as hefore." The Buddha sat for seven days contemplating this tree; "he did not remove his gaze from it during this period, desiring thereby to indicate his grateful feelings towards the tree hy so looking at it with fixed eyes." Hiuen-Tsiang himself and his companions contributed to the nniversal adoration of the tree, for, as that impeccable Buddhist the Shaman Hwni-li rather haldly states, "they paid worship to the Bodhi-tree."

How did Buddhism come to be connected in any way with tree and serpent worship? The answer is, through its connection with Brahmanism. As Buddhism was Brahmanism reformed, so Brahmanism in its turn was the progressive stage of tree and serpent worship. Siva the destroyer is also Nág Bhushan, "he who wears snakes as his ornaments." Among the lower classes in many districts the worship of the serpent frequently supplants or is indistinguishable from the worship of Siva. the Panma Purána, the Bôdhi-tree is the tree aspect of Vishnu, the Indian fig-tree of Pudra, and the Palasa tree of Brahma. Again, Vishnu is also Hari the Preserver -Hari who sleeps upon a coiled serpent canopied by its many heads. The Laws of Manu lay down the worship to be offered both to the water-gods (Nāgas) and the tree spirits:-" Having thus, with fixed attention, offered clarified butter in all quarters . . . let him offer his gifts to animated creatures, saying, I salute the Maruts or Winds, let him throw dressed rice near the door, saying, I salute the water-gods in water; and on his pestle and mortar, saying, I salute the gods of large trees."

The tree and the serpent coiled at its roots are the two essential symbols of primitive religion, whether the tree is the peepul and the serpent a Nāga-râja, or the serpent be the Tiamat of the Babylonians and the tree the date-palm. There are the serpent-guarded fruits of the Hesperides; there is the serpent beneath the tree of knowledge in the garden, or rather grove, of Eden; there is Yggdrasill, the sacred ash tree of Norse mythology, with Nidhögg the great serpent winding round its roots. The first mysteries of religion were celebrated in groves, as those of Asher and Baal and the groves of the early Romans.

Serpent-worship has universally been the symbol-worship of the human desire for life, the consequent reproduction of the species, and hence the immortality of the race. To-day the barren women of Bengal pay reverence to the person of the Naga mendicant. But the worship of trees takes its rise from the omotions of primoval man, inspired in the forest. Fear and awe and the passions all dwelt in its shade. The first god of man emerging from the animal is Pau, and his the woodnote that, calling through the sacred grove, causes the new-found conscience to start and the guilty to hide their shame.

But in pointing out the survivals of ancient faith so naïvely testified to by Hiuen-Tsiang. I have intended no disparagement to the gentle, compassionate Master of the Eastern World. Buddha could not have planted any tree that the jungles of India would not have swiftly strangled in one tropic night. He sought for Brahmanism, that giant of the grove, the light and air for which it pined, he cleared the creepers that would have closed it in, he cut away the dead and dying branch and gave the tree of ancient faith its chance of attainment. And if he left the old wise Nagas to their woodland lakes, or paid silent recognition to the spirit of the Bodhi-tree, who shall blame him? Man the primitive, with his fresh mind brought to bear upon the mysterics around him, with all senses alert to catch the rhythmic pulses of life and view the silent growth that soared beyond him, with his imagination unfettered and his garb of convention as yet nusewn, was nearer to the great dawn than all the bookbound philosophers that followed him.

But Hiuen-Tsiang or Yuan Chwāng, for such is the latest rendering of his name in the modern Pekinese, was born into a world that beheld the tree of Buddhism slowly dying from the top. He bore witness, if unconsciously, to a time of transition and a noble faith in decay, and the swift, silent growth of jungle mythology around the crumhling temples of Buddha. His record of these sixteen years of travel is a priceless one, for through it we are able to reconstruct the world and ways of Buddhist India of the centuries that have passed. Yet far more priceless still is that record, read between the lines, of a human soul dauntless in disaster, unmoved in the hour of triumph, counting the perils of the bone-strewn plain and the unconquered hills as nothing to the ideal that lay before him, the life-work, the call of the Holy Himalayas and the long toil of his closing years. It is difficult to over-estimate his services to Buddhist literature. He returned to his own country with no less than 657 volumes of the sacred books, seventy-four of which he translated into Chinese, while 150 relics of the Buddha, borne by twenty horses, formed the spoil reverently gathered from the many lands we call India.

And so we leave him to his rest upon Mount Sumeru, where once his venturous soul alighted in the dreams of youth, with the serpents coiled beneath its base, with its seven circling hills of gold and the seven seas between, and the great salt ocean encompassing them all. There, as Mr. Watters has finely said, "he waits with Maitreya until in the fulness of time the latter comes into this world. With him Yuan-chuang hoped to come back to a new life here and to do again the Buddha's work for the good of others." Till then we leave him to the long interval of bliss transcending all planes of human ecstasy.

"Around his dreams the dead leaves fall; Calm as the starred chrysanthemum He notes the season glories come, And reads the books that never pall."

L. CRANMER-BYNG.

May 16th, 1911.

CONTENTS.

(For a detailed Index of Proper Names the reader is referred to the Second Volume of the "I coords of the Western World.")

BOOK I.

Begins with the (little of Hiven Telang) in Kow-th, and ends with the necount of his arrival at Kau Chang

Birth and parentage of Hison Triang—Tamily of Hison Triang—Resides at Loyang—Admitted as a rective—Element to Elling-Tu—Famino and riot in the Impire—Leaves Shing Tu—Pawes the garge—Resides to travel to the West—His mether's dream—Starts on his journey—Llang Chow—Assisted by the governor of Kan Chow—Dram of Dharma, a priest—Fingage's a guide—Arrives at the Yuhmen barner—Traverses it e decert—Hisofons of the decert—Resches the first watch tower—The fourth watch tower—Lowe the track—I hands by thirst—Advances towards I gu—Arrives at I gu—The king exhorts him to remain—Hisofons to remain—The ling uses threats—The king persents—Himen-Triang's acknowledgments—His departure to letter—Hison-Triang's le

BOOK II.

Commencing with 0 ki-ns, and ending with Kie jo kio-the (Kanauj).

Arrives at 0 ki ni—Crosses the Silver Mountain—Arrives at K'ui chi— Departs for the Tumple of 0 she is ni—Discussion with Mokshagupta —He encounters Turkish robbers—The Murart Pass—Meets Yeh-bu, the Khau of the Turkis—Reception by the Khau—Receives from the Khau a set of vestments—Arrives at Ping yu—The worship of the Turks-Receives many Turks into the priesthood - Intrigues at Kunduz-Śramana named Dharmasinha-The Navasangharama-The two Stapas at Po-li-Jumadha and Juzgana-Enters the great Snowy Mountains-Passes the Snowy Mountains-Arrives at Bâmiyau-Relics of Sanakavasa-The Temple of Sha-lo-kia-The concealed treasure-Finds the treasure-Arrives at Lamghan-History of Dipaukara Buddha-Relics at Hidda-The cave of Nagaraja Gopala-The Cave of the Shadow-Beholds the Shadow-Stapa built by Kanishka-A statue of white stone-Arrives at the town of Utakhanda-Enters the country of U-chang-na-The river Subhavåstu-The fountain of Apalala-The wooden statue of Maitreya Bodhisattva-Bodhisattva born as Chandraprabha-Temple of U-ssekia-lo (Hushkara)—Arrives at the capital of Kasmir- Explains various Såstras-The Council of Kanishka-Såstras engraved on copper-Attacked by brigauds-The forest of amra trees-Arrives at the kingdom of Teheka-Couverts the heretics-Resides in the convent of Tu-she-sa-na-Reaches Mathura-The River Ganges-The Sangharama of Gunaprabha-Saughabhadra composes the Kosha-Karika Sastra—The ladders of Kapitha—Arrives at Kie-jo-kio-she-kwo (Kanaij) - Saladitya Harshavardhana - Resides at the Bhadra Vihûra . Pp. 35-84

BOOK III.

Asangha's ascent to heaven—His brother Vasubandhu—Attacked by brigands-Prepared as a sacrifice-His miraculous escape-Conversion of the brigands—The field of Great Beneficence—Buddha's ascent into heaven-Arrives at the kingdom of Śrâvastî-Sacred spots at Śrâvastî—The Vihâra Saughârâma—Kapilavastu—The Nâga tank -Kusinagara-The "Stag-desert"-Sacred spots at Banaras-Arrives at the kingdom of Chen-chu (Ghazipur)-Pataliputtra Pura-The stone upon which Buddha stood after leaving Vâisalî—The Bodhimanda—The Bôdhi-tree—Enters Nalanda—Salutes Ching-fa-tsong (Silabadra) - Pays worship to Maitreya Bôdhisattva - Provisions at Nâlanda—The Nâlanda monastery—Structure of Nâlanda—The Saŭghârâmas of India—Srigupta—Bamboo garden of Karanda—The first convocation-Ananda repeats the Sûtras-Bimbasara's decree -Jyôtishka, the nobleman-The Hamsa convent-The image of Avalôkitêśvara—Origiu of Indian letters—Vyâkaranam treatises—Sanskrit grammar-The Subanta "sound (endings")-Arrives at the Kapôtika convent-Offers flowers and vows to the figure of Avalôkitèsvara - Buildings at Hiranya . Pp. 85-127

EOOK IV.

Artives at Clamp 1—The Lifes front—Karmauman—Artives at Samatata—Green Julie Equive of Lu II Ba—Similata—Technol Buillita—Devan I ald limitia—The lang-loom of Dianakaka—Bit verificials.
Bit il Jacc of Diarman tha Badinattra—Lifes is from Ca) in—The Chadinatia tree—The Hi alding—Devit of the lines knop—The Western is men—Padmarda, a fivel—La skagiri—Artives at Malititia—Mid Sadditra—Lines of Philata of Uljain arrives at Malititia—The country of Devia Person—trines at Minh Ulga tem (The Sim god)—The Kahaturya Jayas na—The dream of Hunn Toria,—The Sanra mirace—Cope is a Sutra called Hunn Tunn,—The Santy flower doctrine—Letter agent to Sabbipas and others—The Santy spiken—The heretica care overcome—Kumara raja Pp. 125 105

BOOK V

Negrantha skilled in distinction-The resolve to return-Slabbladra at proves - Silabil wira receives the letter-Procee is to Kumara rate -Arrives at Lie shu h : kl lo-Siladitya raja, and the king of Ta in-Interview with Siladitya-Summattya sel ool doctrine-Commonial at meeting tlaco-An offering to I uldla-The challenge of Hiven Telang-The tooth of Bullla-Fie sick elethant-Conclusion of the Assembly-Arrives at the kin. done of Polose kia-Th. Arens of Charity-B stowal of cutts-He delays his return-Takes his departure-Arrives at Pi le na na-Crosses the Indus-The king of Kayles proceeds I omewards-Armes at Lunduz-Habits of the peor to of Hi mo to to-Reaches Sambhi-The Central Lake-Kuma ralabilha-Meets with robbers -The entranced Arhat-Kustana-The country of hash ar-luzure of Buddha-Arrives at Ahotan-The Arhat fr. m Kasmir-The first Sungharama-Memorial for books-Letter sent to Ko chang-Receives letters of instructions-The Takla Makan des rt - Sends letter to the Lunperer Pp 166-212

CONCLUSION.

Arrives at the capital—Begins to translate the Sansent books he had brought—Resides at a temple called Stimling—Death of the plignum—Is buried in the Western capital—His remains afterwards removed Pp. 213 218

ь

RISTORY

OF THE

EARLY LIFE OF HIUEN-TSIANG.

INTRODUCTION.

1. The present volume is intended to supplement the "History of the Travels of Hinen-Tsiang" (Si-yu-ki), already published by Messrs. Tribuer in two volumes, and entitled "Buddhist Records of the Western World."

The original from which the translation is made is styled "History of the Master of the Law of the three Piţakas of the 'Great Loving-Kindness' Temple." It was written, probably in five chapters, in the first instance by Hwul-li, one of Hiuen-Tsiang's disciples, and afterwards enlarged and completed in ten chapters by Yen-thsong, another of bis followers.\(^1\) Yen-thsong was selected by the disciples of Hwui-li to re-arrange and correct the leaves which their master had written and hidden in a cave. Ho added an introduction and five supplementary chapters. The five chapters added by Yen-thsong are probably these which follow the account of Hiuen-Tsiang's return from India, and relate to his werk of translation in China. I have not thought it necessary te reproduce this part of the original; my object has been simply to complete the "Records" already published relating to India.

I Julien, Preface to the Lafe of Hionen-Tsiang, p. lxxix,

- 2. It will be found that Hwui-li's history often explains or elucidates the travels of Hiuen-Tsiang. Yen-thsong evidently consulted other texts or authorities. This is especially the case in reference to the history of the Temple of Nalanda, in the third chapter of the book, compared with the ninth book of the "Records."1
- 3. I may also notice the interesting statement found in the fourth book, referring to King Sadvaha (So-to-po-ho), and the rock temple he excavated for Nagarjuna.2

Nâgâriuna is now believed to have flourished as late as 100 years after Kanishka,3 i.e., towards the end of the second century A.D. This would also be the date of Sadvaha. Who this king was is not certain. He is said to have reigned over Shing-tu, which may simply mean India. He was surnamed Shi-yen-to-kia (Sindhuka?). He probably had resided on the Indus, and by conquest had got possession of the Southern Kôsala. Was he a Pallava? and was Alamana, where Nagarjuna knew him, the same as Aramana on the Coromandel Coast, between Chôla and Kalinga?⁴ Be that as it may, we know that Nâgârjuna was so closely acquainted with the king that found in the Si-yu-ki. Again, with reference to the remark of Hwni-li found on page 112 infra, that the Nalanda monastery was founded 700 years before the time of Hiuen-Tsiang, this, as I have observed (in the note), clears up the date of Sakrāditya, who is described as a former king of the country, living after the Nirvana of Buddha; the expression "not long after," found in the Si-yu-ki, must be accepted loosely. The foundation of the convent would be about 80 B.C. be about 80 B.g.

With respect to Tathagata-Raja, e.g., the phrase used in the original does not mean "his son," but "his direct descendant," and this goes far to reconcile this account with that found in the Si-yu-ki.

3 So says Taou-Sün in his history of the Sâkya family.
4 For some remarks on this point,

² I think it is abundantly clear from the evidence of Chinese traditions that the Patriarch Nagarjuna and the Bhikshu Nagasena (who disputed with Menander) are distinct persons. The first (as I have shown in some papers written for the Indian Antiquary) was an innovator, and more or less given to magical practices; the latter was a learned Bhikshu engrossed in metaphysical studies studies.

vide Indian Antiquary, May 1888, p. 126, c. 1. Cf. also Schiefner's Taranatha, p. 303.

he sent him a friendly letter exhorting him to morality of hie and religious conduct. The king in return prepared the cave-dwelling for him of which we have the history in the tenth book of the "Recordy". This cave-dwelling was hewn in a mountain called Po-lo-mo-lo kall, i.e., Bhramardgiri, the mountain of the Black bee (Durgh).

Dr. Burgess has identified this mountain with the celebrated Sri Sailas, bordering on the river Kistna, called by Schiefner Qri-Parvata. Doubtless it is the same as it at described by Fishian in the 35th chapter of his travels. He calls it the Po to your Temple, which he explains as "the Pigeon" (Pitrarat) monastery. But a more probable restoration of the Chinece symbols would be the Parrati, or the Parrata, monastery. The symbol you in Chinese Buddhist translations is convident to ra (or rat)?

We may therefore assume that the Po lo gue monastery of Ya-hian was the Durya monastery of Hueu-Tsiang, otherwise callel Sri-parrata. This supposition is confirmed by the actual history of the place; for Hinen-Tsiang tells us that after the Duddhists had established themselves in the monastery, the Brahmans by a stratagem took possession of it. Doubtless, when in possession, they would give it a distinctive maine acceptable to themselves, hence the terms Bhrahmana or Bhrahmananha.

4. With respect to l'a-han's restoration of Po-lo-yue to

¹ M, Juhen rectores lhese symbols to l'armonia, iri, and accept the incrementation in the large rection. Justin 1 gilliam Trangallard been able to consult any parallel record I was stiffied list this restoration was wrong, and in a paper read-brow the loyal Asidet Sciety, J. R. A. S., vol. xv. purt. g., leven veter "inng," "a peck," was a ministe for "fung," "a peck," was a ministe for "fung," "a peck," was a ministe for "fung," "a peck," was a ministe for "fung, " a peck," was a ministe for "fung, and that the little that the little of the "I had been a minister of the little of the "I had been a minister of the little of the "the little of the littl speaks of the Black bee Mountain, using the symbol "fung," "a ber," for "fung," "a peak" "Thus in I'a hisn's account of the

A nau in 1 a maris account of the serverly religious assembly (Variet account proteined), like (Clinece symbol and panels) are part charge, the control of the same part charge, and the same part charge and the same part c

Pârâvata, "a pigeon," there need be no difficulty. It may have been called the "Pigeon monastery" in pre-Brahman The highest storey was probably decorated with pigeon-emblems,1 or, like the top beams of the gateways at Sanchi, adorned with the trisul emblem. This emblem, in all probability, originally denoted the three rays of the rising sun.2 These three rays, by the addition of a simple stroke at the base, were converted into a representation of a descending pigeon or dove. This would be sufficient to account for the name the Pigeon monastery. But there is no need to press this matter; for whether the symbol vue be equal to va or vat, in this particular case, there can be no doubt as to its true restoration.

5. This remark leads me to allude briefly to the people named Yue-chi or Yuc-ti in Chinese Buddhist literature. There is frequent mention made of the Yue-chi in Chinese books previous to the Turushka invasion of North-West India by the predecessors of Kanishka. inhabitants of Vaisâlî are, e.g., in Buddha's lifetime, called Yue-chi.3

These people we know were Vajjis or Vatis: 4 they are represented as a proud and arrogant race, and remarkable for personal display and the equipment of their chariots.5 I should argue then that as the Amardi are called Mardi, and the Aparni are called Parni, so the Vatis were the same as the Avatis. But in the Scythic portion of the Behistun inscription we have distinct mention of the Afartis or Avartis as the people who inhabited the high lands bordering on Media and the south shores of the Caspian. Were the Vajjis or Vatis, then, a people allied to p. 159.

¹ I cannot suppose that he meant to say that the different storeys were constructed in the shape of the animals denoted, but that they were decorated by emblems of these animals.

2 Cf. the figure of Mithra in Dr. Bruce's Itinerarium Septentrionale, and also "Abstract of Four Lectures,"

³ Viz., in many passages in the works of Sang-yui and Taou-Sün.

⁴ The symbol chi is convertible with ti (as before noticed).

⁵ I have called attention to the equipment, &c., of the Licchavis in vol. xix., Sacred Books of the East, p. 257, n. 2.

these Medes or Seyths, who at an early date had invaded The question at any rate is worth considerafinn 1

6 Arising from this is a still more interesting inquiry, although perhaps more speculative, touching the origin of the name "Licchavis," given to the inhabitants of Vusili Mr Hodgson speaks of these people as Seyths .2 and if we remember that the Vanians, otherwise Licchavis. were a foreign people, and throughout their history regarded as unbelievers, having chartyas consecrated to Yakshas, &c, it will not be unreasonable to derive their name from the Seythic rice known as Karis or Kabis. by whose aid Feridun was placed on the throne of Persia. These Karis or Kabis were unbelievers, and their blacksmith's flag, which was adopted by the Persians as their national bruner, was finally taken and perhaps destroyed by the Arabs Is the flag (Plate xxviii fig I, Tree and Serpent Worship) this flag of the Kavis? There is another scene in which a similar flag may be observed (surmounted, as the former, by a trisul). I mean in Plate xxxviii If this Plate represents the siege of Kusinagara by the Vajus, to recover a portion of the relies of Buddha, then the procession on the left, in which the relic casket is carried off in triumph, accompanied by the flag, is probably intended to represent the Vajjians proceeding to Vaisali for the purpose of enshriging the relies, as already noticed and represented in Plate xxviii

7 But again, the followers of the Turushka invaders under Kanishka and his predecessors were deeply imbued with Zoroastrian conceptions, as is evident from their coins,6 and these too were Yue clin or Vatis They must hava derived their Zoroistrian proclivities from residence

¹ In confirmation, I would again refer to the test mony of the sculp tures at Sanchi, ride my short and uncorrected paper J R. A. S. Jan

² Collected Essays, Trübners edi tion, p 17

Cf SrH Rawlinson J R. A. S.

¹v p. 258 6 li Blud heretics, sude Zenda retta by Darmesteter and Mills pass 2 Deresish 1 Kayani 4 Yide paper by M. Aurel Stein Ind Antiq, April 1888 among, or connection with, people professing this religion; INTRODUCTION. and so again we argue that these Yue-chi or Kushans 1 were a Northern people from the borders of the Caspian. The entire argument appears to be confirmed by the fact that Hiuen-Tsiang² places a district called Vati in this very neighbourhood, where also dwelt the Mardi, a term equivalent to Afarti or Avati, as already shown by Norris.

8. This leads me to observe, lastly, that the plates in "Tree and Serpent Worship," in which Nagas and their female attendants are represented as worshipping the various thrones or seats on which was supposed to reside the spiritual presence of Buddha, do in fact denote the effect of the preaching of the Master on these emigrant Medes or Afartis. Mars, i.e., Snakes; and in the Vendidad, Ajis Daháka, The Medes, as is well known, were called "the biting snake," is the personification of Media. When, therefore, Buddha converted the people of Vaisali and the Mallas of Kusinagara (who were Kushans), the success of his teaching was denoted in these sculptures by representing the Nagas (remarkable for their beauty, as were the Medes) in the act of paying worship before him, as he was supposed to be spiritually present on the seats or thrones in places he had occupied during his career in the world.

It will be sufficient for my purpose if these remarks lead to a consideration of the point as to the probability of an early migration (or, perhaps, deportation) of a northem people allied to the Medes into India, who made

9. There is an interesting point to be noticed respecting the council of Patna under Asôka. On page 102 of the translation following, it will be observed that Ashka is said to have convened 1000 priests in the Kukkutsarama, i.e., the "Garden of the coel." By comparing this passage with Diparative, in 57, 58, 59, it will be plain that this convent is the same as the Asokarama, and that the allusion in my text is to the third council at Patine. But it appears from the corresponding account in the Si-yu ki that the members of this council were all Sthavirus of Theras, and therefore that it did not include any members of the other schools. We may hence understand why this council takes such a leading place in the records of the Ceylonese Buddhiet Church, but is almost entirely ignored in the Northern books.

¹ The Kushans are constantly mentioned by Ferdus, as the aboriginal ride p. 45, infra, n. 5.
2 It is curious that the Mallas are in the Mallas are in the Lie Charles we should gather i.e., powerful, or liop, Kavis.

II. I come now to notice very briefly the records left us by I-tsing respecting other pilgrims after Hinen-Tsinig, who, leaving China or neighbouring places, visited secred spets in India consecrated by association with Buddha's presence or connected with his history.

I It will be remembered that Huien-Tsiang returned to China after his sojourn in India in the year 645 AD, and that he died in the year 664 AD. It was just after this event, viz, in the year 671 or 672, that I-tsing, then mere stripling, resolved, with thirty-seven other disciples of Buddha, to visit the Western would to pay reverence to the sacred vestiges of their ruligion. Taking ship at Canton, he found huiself deserted by his companions, and so proceeded alone by what is known as the southein sea route to India. This route, as we shall notice hereafter, was by way of Condore² to Snibloga (Palembana, in as interpreting this language at Sn blogs. We learn too from other sources it at these Con lore regroes were largely used as serve its or slaves at Cinton and Southern Clima about it is time

¹ Pecords de vol n p 96 °
2 It is cursous to find that the m habitants of the Co hore fisht de at this time were of the Aegrotype with thick woolly han and that their lan gange was used in all the neigh bouring districts. I taing speaks of himself

^{*} The expression ch of prests on the page referred to is equal to Sil are un.

Sumatra), and thence to Quedāh; then to Nagapatam and Ceylon, or by way of Arakan and the coast of Burmah to Tamralipti (Tatta), where stood a famous temple called Varâha (the wild boar), in which most of the pilgrims stopped awhile to study Sanskrit. It was in this temple that I-tsing translated the "friendly letter" which Nâgârjuna had composed and sent to his patron King Sadvaha. He dwelt here for three years.

After visiting more than thirty countries, I-tsing returned to Śribhoja, from which place, having accidentally missed his passage in a homeward-bound ship, he sent one of his treatises, viz., his "History of the Southern Sea Religious (Law) Practices," in four chapters, to China (the inner land), and himself remained for some time longer at Śribhoja. Finally, he returned to Honan towards the close of the seventh century A.D. (viz., 693-694 A.D.), bringing with him nearly 400 distinct volumes of original copies of the Sûtras and the Vinaya and Abhidharma Scriptures. He translated during the years 700-703 A.D. twenty volumes, and afterwards in 705 A.D. four other works. Altogether, between the years 700-712 A.D. he translated (with others) fifty-six distinct works in 250 chapters. these, the Kau-fă-kao-sang-chuen (in two parts) is an account of fifty-six priests or Buddhist converts who visited India and the neighbourhood from China and bordering districts during the latter half of the seventh century A.D. A part of these pilgrims proceeded by the southern sea-route, and a part across the deserts and mountains by the northern route to India. spect to the former, I will call attention to the incident recorded on p. 188 of the present work, from which we gather that this route was known and used at any rate as early as Hiuen-Tsiang's time. And it would appear that Bhâskaravarman, the king of Kâmarûpa, and probably former kings of that kingdom, had this sea-route to China under their special protection. In fact, so early as the timo of Ia-hian it appears to have been well established, as he returned from Ceylon to China by sea We learn from I-tsing's account that in his time there was a flourishing mercantile and religious establishment on the coast of Sumitra, probably on the site of the present Palembang (as before suggested), where the increbinits were accustomed to find shelter and ship their spices for Canton I have alluded to this point in the Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society, October 1881, and also in Trubner's Record, there is no need therefore to repert the arguments in this place. But I will place down here in bare resume of I-tsing's notices concerning some of these pulgrims, in the order of his book, referred to above.

KAU FA-KAO SANG CHUEN.

(Aang Cat 1491)

III The author in the prefice having alluded to the journeys of Ia hian and Hiuen-Tsiang, who proceeded to the western countries to procure books and pay reverence to the eacred relies, passes on to notice the hardships and dangers of the route, and the difficulty of finding shelter or entertainment in the different countries visited by their successors, pilgrims to the same spots, and that in consequence of there being no temples (monasteries) set apart for Chinese priests. He then goes on to enumerate the names of the pilgrims referred to in his memoirs

1 The Shaman Hiven Chiu, master of the law, a untive of Sin chang, in Ta chau. His Indian name was Prakasamat. At a very early ago he became a disciple of Buddha and when arrived at manhood, he purposed in his mind to set out to worship the sacred traces of his religion Accordingly, in the course of the Chêng-Kwan period (627-650 AD) taking up his residence in the capital, he first applied limself to the requisition of the Sanskrit (Fan) language Then, stiff in hand, travelling westward, he got beyond Kin fu and passing across the desert of drifting sands, he arrived by way of the Iron Gates,1 over the Snowy Peak, through Tukhâra and Tibet into North India, and finally reached the Jalandhar country, having narrowly escaped death at the hands of robbers. He remained in Jalandhar four years. The king of the Mung 2 country caused him to be detained, and gave him all necessary entertainment. Having gained proficiency in Sanskrit literature, after a little delay, he gradually went southward and reached the Mahabôdhi (convent). There he remained four years. After this he went on to Nâlanda, where he remained three years. After this he followed the Ganges' northern course, and received the religious offerings of the king of the country. He remained here in the Sin-che and other temples, then, after three years, he returned to Loyang by way of Nepal and Tibet, after a journey of some 10,000 li.

Hiuen-Chiu after this, in the year 664 A.D., returned to Kaśmir, where he found an aged Brahman called Lokayata, with whom he returned to Loyang. And now being pressed to set out again, he passed by way of the piled-up rocks (asmakata) along the steep and craggy road that leads across rope-bridges into Tibet. Having escaped with his life from a band of robbers, he arrived at the borders of North India. Here he met with the Chinese envoy,3 who accompanied him and Lokayata to the Marâthâ country in Western India. Here he met the Mung king, and, in obedience to his instruction, remained there for four years. Proceeding to South India, he purposed to return to Tangut, taking with him various sorts of medicines. He reached the Vajrasana, and passed on to Nalanda, where I-tsing met him. And now, having fulfilled the purpose of his life, he found the way through Nepal blocked by Tibetan hordes, and the road

n. 119.

2 There is much mention of the Mung king in I-tsing; is he the same as the Balá-rai who seems to

¹ Vide Buddhist Records, &c., p. 36, 119.
2 There is much mention of the fung king in I-tsing; is he the mention as the Balá-rai who seems to 1 India after the death of Silâditya.

through Kamsa in the hands of the Arabs. Then he returned to the Grihdrakût's peak and the Bambeo garden, but could find ne solution of his doubts, so retiring to the Amrivat country in Mid-India, he died there, aged sixty odd year 1

2 Taou.hi, a doctor of the law, of the district of Lih-Shing, the department Tsa' clean. He was called by the Suiskit name Stideva. He went by the northern route through Tibet towards India, visited the Mahilbôlhi, and paid respect to the sacred traces, and during some years dwelt in the Nalanda monastery and in the Kusi country The Mung king of Amravat paid him great respect Whilst in the Nalanda monastery ha studied books of the Great Vehicle, whilst in the Chu-popun-na (Dararana) temple (the temple of the cremation) he studied the Vinaya pitaka, and practised himself in tha Sabdarulya, a synopsis of which he drew up in the square and grass characters Whilst in the Mahabodhi temple he engraved one tablet in Chinese, giving an account of things new and old in China. Ha also wrote (copied?) some four hundred chapters of sûtras and sûstras whilst at Nalanda I-t-ing although in the west, did not see him, but whilst dwelling in the Amiliant country, he sickened and died, aged fifty years
3 See pin, a doctor of the law, a man of Ts'ai-chau, well versed in the Sanskeit forms of magic meantation He accompanied Hinen clin from North India to Western India Airived at Amarakova (?), he dwelt in the Royal lemple, where he met with Taou-Hi; they remained here for one year together, when Ssc-pin siekened and died. aged thirty-five years

4. Aryanarman, a man of Sin-lo (Corea), left Chang'an AD 638 He set out with a view to recover the true teaching and to adore the sacred relies He dwelt in the

With respect to the other priests the Amaravati country rade Records, named by I tamp we can only here in 200 n 70. give an abstract of his notices For Nâlanda Temple, copying out many Sûtras. He had left the eastern borders of Corea, and now bathed in the Dragon pool of Nâlanda. Here he died, aged seventy odd years.

- 5. Hwwi-nich, a Corean, set out for India 638 A.D., arrived at the Nalanda Temple, and there studied the sacred books and reverenced the holy traces. I-tsing found some writing he had left in the temple, where also he had left his Sanskrit MSS. The priests said he died the same year, about sixty years of age.
- 6. Hiuen-Ta'i, a doctor of the law, a Corean, called by the Sanskrit name of Sarvajñanadeva. In the year Yung-hwei (650 A.D.) he went by the Tibetan road through Nepal to Mid-India; he there worshipped the relics at the Bôdhi Tree. Afterwards going to the Tukhâra country, he met Taou-hi, with whom he returned to the Ta-hsio Temple (Mahâbôdhi). Afterwards he returned to China, and was not heard of again.
- 7. Hinen-hau, a doctor of the law, a Corean, went with Hinen-chiu, in the middle of the Cheng-kwan period, to India, and reaching the Ta-hsio Temple, he died there.
- 8. Two priests of Corea, names unknown, started from Chang'an by the southern sea-route and came to Śribhoja. They died in the country of Po-lu-ssc, to the westward (the western portion of Sumatra).
- 9. Buddhadharma, a man of To-ho-shi-li (Tushara or Turkhara), of great size and strength. He became a priest, and being of a gentle disposition, he wandered through the nine provinces of China, and was everywhere received. Afterwards he went to the west to worship the sacred traces. I-tsing saw him at Nâlanda; afterwards he went to the north when about fifty years old.
- 10. Taou-fang, a doctor of the law, of Ping-chau, went by way of the Sandy Desert and the Tsih rock to Nepal, and afterwards came to the Ta-hsio Temple, where he remained several years; he then returned to Nepal, where he still is.
 - 11. Taou-sing, a doctor of the law, of Ping-chau, called in Sanskrit Chandradera, in the last year of the Chinglican period (649 AD) went by the Thefan (Tibidan) road to Mid-India, he arrived at the Bölin Temple where he worshipped the chariyas, afterwards he went to Nilanda. After that, going twelve stages to the eastward, he came to the King's Temple, where they study only the Little Vehicle. He remained here many years, learning the books of the Tripital a according to the Himayana Returning to China through Nepal, he died 12 Shang tih, a contemplative priest, of Ping-chau He Ionged for tho joys of the Western Paradise, and with the view of being born there he devoted hims if to a life of purity and religion (reciting the name of Buddha) Ho rowed to write out the whole of the Prana-Silra, occupy ing 10 000 chapters. Desiring to worship the sacred vestiges, and so by this to secure for himself the greater ment, with a view to a birth in that heaven, he travelled through the nine provinces (of China) desiring wherever he went to labour in the conversion of men and to write the sacred books. Commet to the coast, he embarked in a ship for Kalinga. Thence he proceeded by sea to the Malaya country, and thence wishing to go to Mid-India, he embarked in a merchant-ship for that purpose Being taken in a storm, tho ship began to founder, and tho sailors and merchants were all struggling with one another to get aboard a little boat that was near. The captain of the ship being a believer, and anxious to save the priest, called out to him with a loud voice to come aboard priest, carted out to him which tout voice to come about the boat, but Shang-thi replied, 'I will not come, savo the other people" And so he remained silently absorbed, as if a brief term of life were agreeable to one possessed of the heart of Bôdhi. Having refused all help, he clasped his hands in adoration, and looking towards the west, he repeated the sacred name of Annta, and when the ship went down these were his list words He was about fifty years of age. He had a follower unknown to me, who also perished with his master, also calling on the name of Amita Buddha.

¹ The coast of Annam

- 13. Matisiniha, a man of the capital, his common name being Wong-po. This nan accompanied the prior Sospin, and arriving at the Middle Land, dwelt in the Sin-hot Temple. Finding his progress little in the Sanskrit language, he returned homewards by way of Nopal, and died on the way there, set, 40.
- offspring of the commander-in-chief Ngin. Leaving North India, he dwelt in Kasmir, and took charge of the toyal elephants. The king of this country delighted day by day in going to the different temples, the Drague-Lake Mountain Temple, the Kung Yang Temple. This is where the 500 Rahats received charity. Here also the venerable Madyantika, the disciple of Ananda, converted the Dragon King. Having remained here some years, he went southwards and came to the great Bâchi Temple, where he worshipped the Bâdhi Tree, beheld the Lake of "Mu-chin" (Muchhalinda), ascended the Vulture Peak, &c. After this he went back to Nepal and died there.
- by the northern route to the Baktra country, and lodged in the Nâva-vihâra in Balkh. In this establishment the principles of the Little Vehicle were taught. Having become a priest, he took the name of Chittavarma. Having received the precepts, he declined to eat the three pure things, on which the master of the convent said, "Tathâgata, our Great Master, permitted five things (as food); why do you object to them?" He answered, "All the books of the Great Vehicle forbid them; this is what I formerly practised; I cannot now bring myself to change." The superior answered, "I have established a practice here in agreement with the three sacred collections, and you follow your own interpretation, which is contrary to mine. I cannot perint this difference of opinion, I cease to be your master. Chittarama was thus reluctantly obliged to yield. Then having learns I a httle Sanskirt, he returned by the northern rout. I know no more about him.

16 Again, there were two men who lived in Nequl, they were the children of the wet-mirse of the Duke-Frince of Titot (Tufan). They both were ordered, but one went back to by life. Trey lived in the Templo of the Hervenly Kings. They spoke Sanskrit well and understood Sans in thooks.

17 Lung, a doctor of the law, I know not whence he came. In the Ching Krean period (627-650 a ti) he went by the northern raute to North India, wisning to visit the ener d spots. In Mid-India he sot a Sankhit copy of the Fil-had (Lotus of the Good Law) and having gone to Gaudhair, he died there

18 Minj Fuen, a man of Yth-chan, a doctor of the law, whose Stuckett name was Chinto deva. He canbarked in a ship of Cochin China, and came to the Kahnga country, and thence to Caylon.

19 I-long, a priest of Yih-chan, well versed in the Vinaya Infala, and in the interpretation of the Viga, set forth from Chang'an with a priest, Chi-ngan, of his own province, and an emiment man called I hinen, and after travelling through the southern provinces came to Niau-Liu, and there embarked on board a merchant-ship Having arrived at Langkia (Kaunalankai), Chi-ngan died, I-long, with his other companion, went on to Coylon, where they worshipped the Tooth, and having obtained various books, returned through Western India. It is not known where he is now residing. He has not been heard of in Mid-India.

20. I-tsing next refers to a priest of Yih chan named Hunning He left Chana by sea for the south in the year 665 a D, and passed three years in the country called Ho-ling!

- 21. The next notice is of the life of a priest called Wan-ki of Kiau-chau, who spent ten years in the Southern Sea, and was very learned in the language of Kun-lun (Condore), and partly acquainted with Sanskrit. He afterwards retired to a lay life and resided at Shi-lo-fo-shi (Sribhôja).
- 22. Another priest called Mocha-Deva, a Cochin-Chinese, went to India by the southern sea-route, and having visited all the countries of that part, arrived at the Mahâbodhi Temple, where he adored the sacred relics, and died æt. 24.
- 23. Kwei-chung (the disciple of Ming-yuen, No. 18), another priest of Cochin-China, went by the Southern Sea with his master, Ming-yuen, to Ceylon; afterwards in company with him proceeded to the Bôdhi Tree, and afterwards to Râjagriha, and being taken sick in the Bamboo garden (Veluvana), he died there, aged thirty years.
- 24. Hwwi Yen, a doctor of the law, of Kwai-chau, was a pupil of Hing-Kung; he went to Simhala, and remained there. Whether he is dead or alive I know not.
- 25. Sin-chiu, a doctor of the law, his country not known. His Sanskrit name Charita-varma. Taking the northern route, he arrived in the Western country, and after the customary reverence, he lived in the Sin-ché Temple. In an upper room of this temple he constructed a sick chamber, and left it for ever for the use of sick brothers. He himself died here. Some days before his death, in the middle of the night, he suddenly exclaimed, "There is Bôdhisattva, with outstretched hand, beckening me to his lovely abode;" and then, closing his hands, with a long sigh he expired, æt. thirty-five.
- 26. Chi Hing, a doctor of the law, of Ngai-Chau, his Sanskrit name Prajña-Deva, went to the Western region, and afterwards dwelt in the Sin-che Temple, north of the river Ganges, and died there, aged about fifty years.
 - 27. We next read of a priest of the Mahayana school ealled Ting, or "the lamp" (dipa), who went with his parents when young to the land of Distripati (Sindoway in Burnah), and there became a priest. He returned with the Chinese envey to the capital. Afterwards he went by the southern sea-route to Ceylon, where he worshipp d the Tooth, and then proceeding through South India and crossing into Eastern India, arriving at Tannahy'i being attacked by robbers at the mouth of the river, he barely escaped with his life, he resided in Tamrihipt for twelve years, having perfected himself in Sinskrit, he then proceeded to Milanda and Buddha Gayā, then to Vaisāli and the Kuši country, and fanally died at Kušinagara, in the Pari-Nirāha Tomble.

28 Sanghatarma, a man of Smerkand, when young erosed the Sandy Desert and eame to China. Afterwards, in company with the envoy, he came to the Greet Bödlin Lunple and the Vajråsana, where he burnt lamps in worship for seven days and seven nights continuously Moreover, in the Bödlin Hall, under the Tree of Aśoka he earved a figure of Buddha and of Kiran-tseu-tsan Bodlin-sattia. He then returned to China. Afterwards, being sent to Kiran chau (Cochina-China), there was great scarcity of food there. He daily distributed food, and was so affected by the sorrows of the fatherless and bereaved orphans, that he was moved to tears as he visited them. He was on this account named the weeping Bodhisattia. He died shortly afterwards from infection caught there, which soon terminated fatally, set about sixty.

29 Two priests of Kao-chang went to Mid-India, and died on the voyage Their Chinese books are at Śribhoja

30 Wan-yun, a doctor of the law, of Loyang, travelling through the southern parts of China, came to Cochin China, thence went by ship to Kalifiga, where he died

31 I hwas, a man of Loyang, of eminent ability, set out for India to recover some copies of Sanskrit (Fan) books He died at 30.

- 32. Three priests set out by the northern route for Udyana, and also for the place of Buddha's skull-bone. They are said to have died there.
- 33. Hwui Lun, a Corean, otherwise called Prajnavarma, came by sea from his own country to Fuchau, and proceeded thence to Chang'an. Following after the priest Hiven-chiu (No. 1, p. xiii.), he reached the West, and during ten years dwelt in the Amravat country and in the Sin-che Temple (north of the Ganges). Passing through the eastern frontiers, and thence proceeding northward, he came to the Tu-ho-lo (Tukhara) Temple. This temple was originally built by the Tukhâra people for their own priests. The establishment is called Gandharasanda. the west is the Kapiśa Temple. The priests of this establishment study the Little Vehicle. Priests from the north also dwell here. The temple is called Gunacharita.

Two stages to the east of the Mahabhodi 1 is a temple called Kiu-lu-kia.2 It was built long ago by a king of the Kiu-lu-ka country, a southern kingdom (Kurukshetra?). Although poor, this establishment is strict in its teaching. Recently, a king called Sun-Army (Adityasena), built by the side of the old temple another, which is now newly finished. Priests from the south occupy this temple.

About forty stages east of this, following the course of the Ganges, is the Deer Temple, and not far from this is a ruined establishment, with only its foundations remaining, called the Tchina (or China) Temple. Tradition says that formerly a Mahârâja called Śrigupta built this temple for the use of Chinese priests. He was prompted to do so by the arrival of about twenty priests of that country who had travelled from Sz'chuen to the Mahâbhôdi Temple to pay their worship. Being impressed by their pious demeanour, he gave them the hand and the revenues of about twenty villages as an endowment. This occurred some 500 years ogo The land has now reverted to the king of Lastern India whose name is Devararma, but he is said to be willing to give back the temple-land and the enlowment in case any priests come from China. The Mahii hô h Temple, near the Diamond Throne (se. at Gava). was built by n king of Coylon for the use of priests of that country The Nalanda Temple which is seven stages north-cast of the Mahabhodi, was built by an old king, Sri Sakrilitya, f ra Blukshin of North India called Raja Bldia. After be inning it he was much obstructed but his descendants finished it, and made it the most magni ficent establishment in Jambudaha This building of Nalonda stands four square, like n city precinct gates (porches) have overlapping eaves covered by tiles, The buildings (gates f) are of three storeys, each storey about twelve feet in height

¹ It is doubtful whether the Maha-1 It is doubtful whether the Maha-bhodi named here does not refer to the Tu-ho-lo Temple mentioned country.

2 This may be restored to Kuruka, and may possibly refer to the Kuru above.

Outside the western gate of the great hall of the temple is a lorge stape and various charty as each creeted over different sacred vestiges and adorned with every kind of precious substance

The superior is a very old man, the Karmalana or Viharasicams or Viharapala is the chief officer after the superior, and to him the utmost deference is paid

This is the only temple in which, by imperint order, a water clock is kept to determine the right time. The might is divided into three witches during the first and last of which there are religious services, in the middle witch, as the priests may desire they can watch or repose. The method in which this clock determines the time is fully described in the 'Ki luce chuen'

The temple is called Sri Nalanda Vahara after the name of the Naga called Nanda

The great temple opens to the west Going about twenty paces from the gate there is a stup about 100 feet high

This is where the Lord of the World (Lokanâtha) kept Wass (the season of the rains) for three months; the Sanskrit name is Malagandhakoti. Northwards fifty paces is a great stûpa, even higher than the other; this was built by Balâditya—very much reverenced—in it is a figure of Buddha turning the wheel of the law. South-west is a little châitya about ten feet high. This commemorates the place where the Brahman, with the bird in his hand, asked questions; the Chinese expression Su-li fau-to means just the same as this.

To the west of the Milagandha Hall is the tooth-brush tree of Buddha.

On a raised space is the ground where Buddha walked. It is about two cubits wide, fourteen or fifteen long, and two high. There are lotus flowers carved out of the stone, a foot high, fourteen or fifteen in number, to denote his steps.

Going from the temple south to Rajagriha is thirty li. The Vulture Peak and the Bambu Garden are close to this city. Going S.W. to the Mahâbôdhi is seven stages (yojanas). To Vaisâli is twenty-five stages north. To the Deer Park twenty or so stages west. East to Tamralipti is sixty or seventy stages. This is the place for embarking for China from Eastern India and close to the sea. There are about 3500 priests in the temple at Nalanda, which is supported by revenues derived from land (villages) given by a succession of kings to the monastery.

34. Taou-lin, a priest of King-ehau (in Hupch), whose Sanskrit name was Silaprabha, embarked in a foreign ship, and passing the copper-pillars, stretched away to Lanka (Kamalanká); after passing along the Kalinga coast he came to the country of the naked men. He then proceeded to Tamralipti, where he passed three years learning the Sanskrit language. After visiting the Vajrâsana and worshipping the Bôdhi Tree, he passed to Nalanda, where he studied the Kosha, and after a year or two went to the Vulture Peak, near I ajagraha, and finally proceeded to South India

35 Tan Kicong, a priest of the same district in China, went to India by the southern sea-route, and having arrived at A li In lo (Arakan I) he was reported to have found much favour with the king of that country, and to have got a temple built and books and images, in the end, as was supposed, he died there

36 Hum ming, another priest from the same district, set out to go to India by the southern set route, but the slap being baffled by contray winds, put in at Tung chu (copper juliars), erected by Ma-ynen, and after stopping at Shang Ling, returned to China

37 Hinen to, a priest of Kung-chow and the district of King Ning, was a man of high family. He appears to have accompanied an envoy in a Persian slip to the southern seas Having arrived at Io shar (Sribhoia), he remained there six months studying the Sabdavidya, the king was highly courteous and on the occasion of his sending a present to the country of Mo-lo-yu (Malaya), Hinen to proceeded there, and remained two months He then went on to Que lah, and then at the end of winter went in the royal ship towards Lastern India Going north from Quidali, after ten days or so they came to the country of the naked men I or two or three lis along the eastern shore there were nothing but ecces-nut trees and forests of betel-vines Tho people, when they saw the ship, came alongside in little boats with the greatest clamour, there were upwards of one hundred such boats filled with cocor nuts and plantains, they had also baskets, &c., made of rattan, they desired to exchange these things for whatever we had that they fincied, but they liked nothing so much as bits of iron. A piece of this metal two fingers' length in size would buy as many as five or ten cocoa-nuts Tho men here are all naked, the women wear a girdle of leaves, the sailors in loke offered them clothes, but they made signs that they did not want any such articles. This country, according to report, is south-west of Sz'-ch'uan. The country produces no iron and very little gold and silver; the people live on cocoanuts and some esculent roots, but have very little rice or Iron is very valuable; they call it Lu-a. men are not quite black, of middling height, they use poisoned arrows, one of which is fatal. Going for half a month in a north-west direction, we come to Tamralipti, which is the southern district of East India. This place is some sixty stages or more from Nâlanda and the Bôdhi Tree. Meeting the priest called "Lamp of the Great Vehicle" (Mahâyana dipa) in this place, they remained together there one year, learning Sanskrit and practising themselves in the Śabda-śâstra. They then went on with some hundred or so merchantmen towards Central India. When about ten days' journey from the Mahâbôdhi, in a narrow pass, the road being bad and slippery, Hiuen-ta was left behind and attacked by robbers, who stripped him and left him half dead. At sundown some villagers rescued him and gave him a garment. Going on north, he came to Nâlanda, and after visiting all the sacred spots in the neighbourhood, he remained at Nâlanda ten years, and then going back to Tamralipti, he returned to Quedah, and with all his books and translations, amounting in all to 500,000 slokas, enough to fill a thousand volumes, he remained at Śribhôja.

- 38. Shen-hing, a priest of Sin-Chow, also went to Śribhoja, where he died.
- 39. The priest Ling-wan, having gone through Annam, came to India, and erected under the Bôdhi Tree a figure of Mâitreya Bodhisattva one cubit in height, and of exquisite character.
- 40. Seng-chi, a priest and companion of the former, went to India by the southern sea-route, and arrived at Samotata. The king of that country, named Râjabhata (or path), a Upas ika, greatly reverenced the three objects of worship, and devoted himself to his religious duties.

41. A priest Chi-er, is mentioned, who went to the south and resided at Shang king, near Cochin-China. He then went south to Sribhoja, and afterwards proceeded to India.

42. A priest, Wou Hing (Prajhadera), in company with the last, left Haman with an easterly wind, after a mouth he arrived at Sribhôja. He then went in the royal ship for fifteen days to Malaya, in another fifteen days to Quǐ àh, then waiting till the end of winter, going west for thirty days he arrived at Naga-radana (Nagapatam I), whence after two days' sea-toyage he came to Subhapara (Ceylon). He there worshipped the sacred tooth, and then going N.L. for a mouth, arrived at the country of O-li-ki-lo. This is the eastern limit of East India. It is a part of Janabudylpa. After this he proceeded to the Mah'llô lli Temple. Having rested here, he returned to Nalanda and studied the Yoja, Korla, and other works. Moved with a desire to find copies of the Vinaya, he repured to the Tiladaka Temple. In the end he died at Nalanda.

43. Fa-shin also started by the southern rente, and after passing Shang-king (Saigon), Ku-long, Kaling, and Quedali, he died.

Putting together these notices, we may conclude that the sea-route between China and India in the early years of the Tang dynasty was by way of Java, Sminatra, the Structs of Malacca, the coast of Burma and Arakan, to Tamralipti, or clese by the more adventurous way of Coylon from Qu'Cdhl. It seems that the Condore Islands were a centre of trade, and that the language of the natives of these islands was used generally through the Sonthern Sers; at least I-Ising speaks of himself as interpreting the language at Sribhôja (vide p. vv. n.)

We have one or two points of some certainty in the itinerary of these pilgrims. For instance, in the Si-yu-ki, Hiuen-Tsiang (Records, ii. 200) says that to the N.E. of Samotata is the country called Śrikshetra, to the S.E. of this is Kamalangka, to the east of this is Dârapati (read Dvârapati). This country has been identified by Captain St. John (Phænix, May 1872) with old Tung-oo and Sandoway in Burma, lat. 18° 20' N. long. 94° 20' E.; it is, in fact the "door land" between Burma and Siam; this latter being called Champa or Lin-I. Hiuen-Tsiang remarks that to the S.W. of Lin-I, or Siam, is the country of the Yavanas, or, as they are called in his text, the Yen-mo-na. We do not read of this country in I-tsing; it may perhaps represent Cambodia.

IV. Another work of some importance written by I-tsing is the following:—

NAN-HAE-RI-RWEI-NIU-FA-CH'UEN.

(Nanj. Cat. 1492.)

This work, in four chapters, was compiled by I-tsing, and forwarded to China "by one returning to the inner land," to be arranged and published. It relates to matters connected with the religious customs of India and some other districts (Southern Sea islands) visited by I-tsing, or gathered from others who had visited these places, during the time of his absence on foreign travel.

Passing by the introduction, which refers to the origin of the world and its orderly arrangement, I-tsing (or his cditor) next alludes to the number of the Buddhist schools (Nikâyas), and the various countries in which they flourished. The chief schools of independent origin—but depending on distinct tradition—he names, are these:—

- 1. The Aryamahâsanghiti, divided into seven branches.
- 2. The Aryasthaviras, divided into three branches, the Tripitaka more or less like the former.

- 3 Åryamûlasarvûstavâdus, divided into four brunches, the Tripitaka more or less like the former
- 4. The Aryasammatiyas, divided into four branches The Tripitaka differs in its number of stanzas from the former and the school has other divergences

These schools, with their sub-brinches, compose the eighteen sects into which Buddhism was divided at an early date (the century following the Niryana)

In the country of Magadha, he observes, each of the four schools is in a flourishing condition. In the Maintha country and in Sindh the Sammathy a school is chiefly followed. In the north the Sirvastanadins and Mahasinghikas are met with; in the southern borders the Mahasthaviras are principally found. The others are little known. On the eastern cutskirting countries the four schools are intermingled. [From Nalanda, five hundred stages cast, is the frentier land referred to. For these countries inde Records, ii. 200]

In Ceylen the Sthavira school alone flourishes, the Mahasanghikas are expelled

With respect to the ten countries known as the Southern Ser islands, the Mühsarvästrvädins and the Sammatlyas are principally found, the other two schools at the present time are seldem met with. The teaching of the Lattle Vehicle is principally affected, in Mo-lo yau, however, the Great Vehicle is studied also. Some of these islands may be perhaps 100 ls in circuit, others several hundred ls, and some 100 stages round. It is difficult to calculate distances on the great ocean, but the best skilled merchantmen know that they first arrive at Kiu-lun (cilled by the Cochin-China ambasadors Kwan-lun)?

¹ Reckoning from the west, the names of the islands are Poliuse, Mole yau (the same as Shi Is fo yau) Mole-siu Ho ling, Tan Tar, I wan yoan, Poli Kuu lun, Fo shi yo to Ho shen Mo ku ma, and other little islands not catalogued.

² The people of this country alone have woolly hair and black skins. With this exception, the people of all the other countries are like those of Chun,—Ch. Ld.

In Châmpa (otherwise called Lin-I), the Sammatlya school is chiefly found, with a few Sarvâstavâdins. A month's voyage south west is Annam. Formerly the people sacrificed to Heaven, but afterwards the law of Euddha flourished; now a wicked king has destroyed the priests, and all the heretics live mixed together. This is the southern point of Jambudvipa.

Speaking generally, the Great Vehicle prevails in the north, the teaching of the Little Vehicle in the south. In some parts of China the Great Vehicle is in favour, but with these exceptions the Great and Little Vehicle are intermingled without distinction. In both cases the rules of moral conduct and the four truths are taught, but in the Great Vehicle they worship the Bodhisattvas, but not in the teaching of the Little Vehicle.

With respect to the Great Vehicle, there are only two branches, viz., (1) the Chung-kwan (Mâdyamîkas?); (2) the Yôga system. The Mâdyamîkas regard all ontward phenomena as empty and substantially unreal. The Yôgas regard outward things as nothing, inward things as everything. Things are just what they appear to cognition. And so with respect to the sacred doctrine, it is true to one and false to another; there is no positive certainty for all. The great aim is to reach that shore, and to stem the tide of life.

After some further remarks, I-tsing proceeds to say that his records are framed on the teaching of the Mûlasarvâ-stavâdin school, divided into three branches:—I. The Dharmagûptas; 2. the Mahîsâsakas; 3. the Kâsyapîyas.

In Udyâna, Karashar, and Khotan there is a mixture of doctrine.

We will now pass on to give the headings of the chapters in the work under notice:—

¹ That shore, i.e., the other side of the stream of transmigration.

THE NAMES OF THE FORTY CHAPTERS OF THE NAN-HAE-RI-EWEI-NIU.

- 1. The evil of disregarding the observation of the season of rest (Vass).
- 2. Right decorum in the presence of the honoured one (images or paintings of the honoured one or ones).
- 3. The diminutive seats to be used whilst eating or reposing.
- 4. On the necessary cleansing of food vessels and personal preparation.
 - 5. On cleansing after meals.
 - 6. On the two sorts of water-pitchers.
 - 7. On the early inspection with regard to insects.
 - 8. On the early tooth-cleansing wood (brush),
 - 9. Rules on undertaking religious fasts,
 - 10. On special requirements as to raiment and food,
 - 11. As to the different kinds of vestments.
 - 12. On special rules as to female clothing.
 - 13. Rules as to sacred (pure) enclosures.
 - 14. The resting-time of the community (the five grades).
- 15. The period called Pravarana (relaxation after Vass).
 - 16. On the mode of eating food (with chop-sticks).
- 17. On proper rules as to the seasons or hours of religious worship.
 - 18. On articles of private property.
 - 19. Rules and regulations for ordination,
 - 20. The proper occasions for ablutions.
- 21. On scats used, and personal accommodation whilst seated.
- 22. On rules concerning apartments for sleeping and resting.
 - 23. On the advantage of proper exercise to health.
 - 24. Worship not mutually dependent.
 - 25. On the way of personal behaviour to a teacher.

- 26. On the way of conduct towards strangers (priests).
- 27. On symptoms of bodily illness.
- 28. On medical rules.
- 29. On exceptional medical treatment (for offensive ailments).
 - 30. On turning to the right in worship.
- 31. On rules of decorum in cleansing the sacred objects of worship.
 - 32. On chanting in worship.
 - 33. On reverence to sacred objects.
 - 34. On rules for learning in the West.
 - 35. On the propriety of long hair.
 - 36. On disposing of the property of a deceased monk.
 - 37. On property allowed to the fraternity.
 - 38. On cremation.
 - 39. On charges brought by low or depraved men.
 - 40. The unselfish character of the old worthies.

So far the headings of the chapters of this most important but obscure work. It is to be hoped that the promised translation by a Japanese scholar may soon appear; the contents of the various chapters, as I have summarised them for my own reference, show me that the book, when clearly translated, will shed an unexpected light on many dark passages of Indian history.

The entire number of books translated by I-Tsing, as we have before remarked, amounted to fifty-six. I need allude to none of these on the present occasion, except to say that their names may be found in Mr. Nanjio's Catalogue of the Buddhist Tripiṭaka (Appendix II., p. 441). With respect, however, to the small tract numbered 1441 in the Catalogue, I may add that I am now printing the original text, which I hope to publish shortly with an English translation and notes.

In commending the present rather laborious work to the notice of the public, I must regret its many defects, and at the same time apologise both to the Publishers and my Readers for the long delay in completing the task I undertook. Responsibilities which have increased with increasing years, and flagging energies, the result of long sickness, must be my excuse

But I may not conclude without sincerely thanking those who have supported me in my labours, and especially his Lordship the Secretary of State for India and his Grace the Duke of Northumberland, from both of whom I have received material assistance.

GREENS NORTON RECTORY.

HISTORY

3111 10

EARLY LIFE OF HIUEX-TSIANG

AND OF

HIS TRAVELS IN THE WESTERN WORLD.

BOOK I.

Begins with the Vieth (of Hown Trians) on Knowld, and ends with the account of his arrival at Kau Chang

The infant name of the Master of the Law was Illuen-Tsiang; his ordinary family name was Clim; he was a native of Chin-Liu. He descended from Chang-Kong, who during the Han dynasty was lord of Tai-K'iu. His great-grandfather, whose name was Kin, was prefect of Shang-Tang, under the after-Wei dynasty. His grandfather Kong, by his distinguished scholarship, obtained employment in the public service. During the Ts'i dynasty he was appointed president of the Imperial College, having, as endowment, the revenues of the town of Chow-nam: he thus founded the fortunes of his descendants; he also was born in the district of Kowshi. His father Hwui was distinguished for his superior

¹ This title, which corresponds to the Chinese Fasze, will be applied to Huen Telang throughout the present work.
² Old University at I-cking abilities, the elegance of his manners and his moderation. At an early age he (i.e., the father of Hinen-Tsiang) began to recite the Sacred Books; in figure he was eight feet in height, with finely lined eyebrows, and bright eyes. He wore his dress large, and his girdle was full, loving to be recognised as a scholar. Born in those times, and a man of a remote district, he was simple in his manners and contented—and sought neither honour nor preferment.

Anticipating the decay and fall of the Sui dynasty, he buried himself in the study of his books. Many offers of provincial and district offices were pressed on him, which he persistently refused; he declined all magisterial duties on the plea of ill-health; so he remained in retirement, much to the admiration of his acquaintances.

He had four sons, of whom the Master of the Law was the fourth. Even when a child he (i.e., the Master of the Law) was grave as a prince, and of exceptional ability. When he was eight years old his father sitting near his table was reading aloud the Hiau classic (on filial piety), and coming to the passage when Tsang-tseu rose (before his master), suddenly the boy arranged his dress and got His father asking him why he did so, he replied: "Tsang-tseu hearing the command of his master, rose up from his seat; surely then Hiuen-Tsiang dare not sit at ease whilst listening to the loving instruction (of his His father was much pleased by this reply, and perceived that his child would become a distinguished Then calling together the members of his family. he narrated the incident to them, on which they congratulated him, and said: "There is here promise of high nobility." Even at this early age his wisdom was of such a remarkable kind.

From this age he took to reading the Sacred Books,¹ and was charmed with the writings of the ancient sages

¹ That is, the Classics and other religious treatises.
2 The foot here referred to is equal to about 9½ inches. Vide Julien's Translation, p. 468, l. 31.

as the outward appearance of the youth was prepossessing, he selected him and took him to the officers and said: "To repeat one's instruction is easy, but true self-possession and nerve are not so common; if you elect this youth, he will without doubt become an eminent member of the religion of Śâkya. Only I fear that neither I (Kwo) nor your Excellences will live to see the day when the soaring clouds shall distil the sweet dew (of Buddha's doctrine). But nevertheless, the illustrious character of this honourable youth will not be eclipsed, as I regard the matter."

And so the words of the noble Ch'ing prevailed.

Having been admitted as a reeluse, he dwelt with his brother.

At this time there was in the convent a Master of the Law, called King, who recited and preached upon the Sûtra of the Nirvana. Hiuen-Tsiang having got the book, studied it with such zeal that he could neither sleep nor eat. Moreover he studied under the direction of Yen, doesor of the law, the Sastra of the Great Vehicle (Mahayana Sastra); and thus every day his love for such studies increased. By hearing a book only once, he understood it thoroughly, and after a second reading he needed no further instructions, but remembered it throughout. All the assembly of priests were astonished. and when at their direction he mounted the pulpit, he expounded with precision and clearness the deep principles of Religion to the bottom. The Masters and houourable body of priests listened with attention; he thus laid the foundation of his renown. At this time he was thirteen years old.

After this the Sui dynasty lost the Empire, and the whole kingdom was in confusion. The capital became a rendezvous for robbers, and the Ho and Lo^1 a resort of wild beasts. The magistrates were destroyed and the

¹ Or, the district between the rivers Ho and Lo.

Min and Shuh, and amongst the rest the body of the priests (in question).

And now the Master of the Law addressed his brother and said: "There is no religious business being attended to, and we cannot be idle, let us pass into the country of Shuh (Sz'chüen) and pursue our studies."

His brother having consented, they traversed together the valley of Tseu-wu and entered Han-chüen, and there they met the two Doctors Kong and King, the principal priests of their convent. At the sight of these persons they were moved to tears with joy, and they abode with them a month and some days, receiving instruction; after this they went on together to the town of Shing-tu. there were many priests assembled in this town they founded there a religious place of assembly.2 Thus they listened once more to Sai-tsin explaining the Shi-lun (Mahâyâna Samparigraha Sastra) and the Pi-tan (Abhidharma Sastra), whilst the Master Chin expounded the works of Kia-yen (Katyayana). Studying thus without loss of a moment, and with great earnestness, after two or three years, they had thoroughly mastered the teaching of the different schools.

At this time the Empire was visited with famine and riot; in Shuh alone there was abundance and peace; priests from every quarter therefore flocked there, and hundreds of men ever assembled under the pulpit of the Preaching Hall. The Master of the Law by his profound wisdom and eminent talent in discussion, surpassed them all; so that throughout Wu and Shuh and Khing and Tsuh there was no one but had heard of him, and desired to witness his skill, as those of old respected the names of Li and Kwoh.3

The Master of the Law for the sake of being with his brother took up his abode in the Hung-hwui Temple of

¹ North-West and South-West China.
² Or, they established Religious meetings.
³ Vide Mayers, 379 and 304.

Shing-tu: he too (i.e. his leather) was remarkable for his saintly appearance, and was of a noble and commanding presence like that of his fither. Ho loved both the soferie and exotorie doctrine. He was accustomed to treach on the Nirvana Sutra and the Sistra called She tashing and the Abhidharma (Stera) he was versed also in literature and history, but he excelled principally in the study of Lan (tow) and Chwanz The people of Shuh so much loved him that the Governor of the Province. Teau-Kung gave him particular marl s of his high respect When he un lertook to write or speak on a subject his manner was so dignified and his discourse so free from enbarrasment that he was in no was inferior to his brother

As to the latter, he was grave and dignified, living apart from the crowd and avoiding worldly concerns He traversed the cight expanses (hearenst), and penetrated the hidden secrets of nature. Possessed of a noble ambition he desired to investigate theroughly the meaning of the teaching of the Holy ones, and to restere the lost doctrine and to re-establish the people. Ho was prepared to face wind and weather, and his mind, even if he stool by chance in the presence of the Emperor. would only gather strength and firmness certainly in these respects he surpassed his brother But both of them were distinguished by their singular talents and a certain sweetness of manner, they were renowned among their associates and of noble character, so that the brothers of Lu-Shan could not add to their fame.

When the Master of the Law had completed his twentieth year, that is, in the fifth year of the period Wu-tch, he was fully ordaned in Shing-tn During the Rain retreat he studied the Vinaya according to the Rule of the five divisions and soven sections,4 after

ture
2 Name I before

¹ i.e. Buildhim and other litera

The Vinya of the Mahledeala School, and to it is seen sections of 'Moral School's 'Telera' to by Mr Alwis,
2 Mayers 92
4 This is obscure It may refer to Pall Text Society

mastering this at one time, he then turned his attention to the Sûtras and Śastras, and having investigated these he once more thought of going to the Capital, to inquire from the most celebrated masters concerning some difficulties he had met with (in his studies). However, being restrained from effecting his purpose by his brother's influence, he secretly embarked with some merchants, and passing down the river through the three gorges 1 he arrived at Hang-chow, where he retired into the temple called Tien-hwang. The clergy and laity of that place had for a long time known of him by report, and now they came together and prayed him to explain the Sacred Books. The Master of the Law on their account preached on the Shi-lun, and the Abhidharma. From the summer to the winter, he went through each of these three times.

At this time the King of Han-yang, by his highly virtuous character and his affectionate kindness, held his country in constraint and obedience. Hearing of the arrival of the Master of the Law, he was exceedingly rejoiced, and went in person to salute him. On the day when he stated the theme of the religious discussion, the king and his officers and a great number of lay and religious people came together to see him and hear him. And now they pressed forward in vast bodies to raise a discussion.² The Master of the Law answered them in turn and gave them the desired explanations. They soon confessed themselves to be surpassed in argument—whilst the more learned were grieved to think that they were not able to gain the victory.

The king then spoke of him in admiration without bounds: and offered him abundant presents, which he declined to accept. After the conferences he proceeded again northwards, seeking the most renowned priests. Arriving at Siang-chow, he began to place his difficulties

Vide Mayers, No. 873.
 Vide Julien, in loc.

lefere Hin, a Marter of the law, and ask for explana-

From this became to this clew, and there he visited Sinn, a Master of the Law, and stided the Sinn, adulting (Satari fitner if mare-fitted). After this he entered that gian and took up his above in the Tachichi Tetiple. There be stitled with Itch a Master of the Law, the Kin the (Acida) Sister. After the reading his was perfected, and he refused the whole treatise in his merery. Norther young nor old could rurpus him liven in the irot extremel difficult passages by out the comprehension of all the others, he alone could penetrate the menting of there mysteries and discover the sense.

At this time there were at Changan two great terchers, Nang and Pea, they had thoroughly explained the Two Vehicles, and investigated the Three Systems they were the leaders of the religious people in the Canntal Both clerry and lasts resorted to them, the entire district resounded with their princes and their reputation spread beyond the sea, moreover their describes were as numerous as the clouds. Although they had mastered all the Sutres, they loved to discourse principully on the Shi ta-lun. The Master of the Law had alreads distinguished himself in the land of Wu and Shuh, from the time he arrived at Chang'an, he persistently inquired of these teachers, and in a moment perceived the meaning of the deepest truths that they could explain. They were filled with admiration and overwhelmed him with praise "Master," they said, "von can be well styled in the religion of Sakva, 'n courier who traverses a thousand Is in a day ' You are called to make the sun of wisdom shine again, but as for us, norn out by age, we fear that we shall not ree the day!"

From this time the disciples all looked up to him with reverence, and his renown filled the capital

I The Chinese form of Mahdbidhi

The Master of the Law having visited the celebrated Masters all round, devoured their words and examined their principles; and so he found that each followed implicitly the teaching of his own school; but on verifying their doctrine he saw that the holy books differed much, so that he knew not which to follow. He then resolved to travel to the Western world in order to ask about doubtful passages. He also took the treatise called Shi-tsih-ti-lun¹ to explain his various doubts; this treatise is now called Yu-kia-sse-ti-lun.2 "Moreover," he said, "Fa-hien and Chi-yen, the first men of their age, were both able to search after the Law for the guidance and profit of the people; should I not aim to preserve their noble example (traces) so that their blameless character may not be lost to posterity? The duty of a great Teacher should be to follow in their steps."

On this he agreed to go in company with others and present a petition; but there was an imperial rescript forbidding (the project of going abroad). On this the others gave up the plan; the Master of the Law alone did not abandon his purpose, and resolved to travel alone. Again, hearing of the obstructions and dangers of the Western road, he considered with himself and resolved that as he had been able to bear and overcome so many calamities common to men, he could not withdraw from his present purpose. Then he entered a sacred building and made known his undertaking, and requested permission to carry it out, humbly praying 3 (vowing and begging) all the Holy Ones by their mysterious influences to cause his journey and his return to be without damage.

At the birth of the Master of the Law his mother had dreamt that she saw him going to the West clothed in a white robe—on which she said: "You are my son, Saptadaśa bhūmi Sāstra.

 Yôgāchārya bhūmi Sāstra.

Much comment has been made on the use of the word "praying" in connection with these translations. It is said that Buddhists do not pray. The Chinese, however, admits of no other rendering than that in the text, which denotes both "aspiration" and "supplication."

where then are you going?" In reply he said, "I am going to seel for the Law". This was the first indication, then, of his forcion travels.

In the third year and the eighth month of the period Cheng Kwan (630 AD), he was prepare I to male n start. Desiring some happy omen, he dreamt at malit that he raw in the middle of the creaters the Mount Sumeru 1 crfected with the four precious substances-its appearance supremely bright and majestic. He then ht he purposed to scale the Mount but the boisterous waves prose pleft and swelled mudituly. Mercover, there was neither ship nor raft, nevertheless, he had no shadow of fear, but with fixed purpose he entered (the searce) Suddenly he saw n letus of stone burst as it were exultingly from the deen. traine to nut his foot on it, it retired, whilst he naused to behold it, it followed his feet and then disappeared ,in a memerit he found himself at the feet of the Mount. but he could not climb its erags and scarped sides as he tried to leap upwards with all his strength, there arese in a mement a might, whirlward which rused him aleft to the summit of the Mount Looking pround him on the four sides from the top he beheld neight but an uninterrupted herizen, ravished with joy he awoke

On this he forthwith started on his journey. He was then twenty six years ofnge. At this time there was n Tsin Chow priest called Han-Ta whe hised in the capital and studied the Nirvânn Sûtra. His study being finished he was returning to his home—they both went together therefore so far ns Tsin-Chow Having stopped there one night, he met with an associate from Lan-Chow, going on with him he came to Lan Chow and stopped there one night. Here he met with some mounted men who were returning to Linng-Chow, after escorting an officer. Going with them, he came to that place, and stopped there a month and some days. The priests and laymen invited him to explain the Nirvâna Sûtra and the Shi-lun, and the Pan-jo-king.¹ The Master of the Law accordingly opened out the meaning of these works. Now Liang-Chow is the place of rendezvous for people dwelling to the West of the River: moreover merchants belonging to the borders of Si-Fan (Tibet) and countries to the left of the T'sung-Ling Mountains, all come and go to this place without hindrance.

¹ This passage is very obscure

On the day of opening the Religious Conference, these men all came together to the place and offered jewels and precious things, as they bowed down and uttered the praises of the Master. And on their return to their several countries they loudly applauded the Master of the Law to their Rulers, saying that he was about to go westwards to seek the Law in the country of the Brahmans.

In consequence of this throughout the kingdoms of the West all persons were prepared with joyful heart to entertain him on his arrival, with magnificence.

The day of the Conference being ended, they offered him in charity abundant gifts, gold and silver money, and white horses without number. The Master of the Law, accepting one half, caused the lamps of the different convents to be lit, and as for the rest of the money he distributed it among the various religious establishments. At this time the administration of the country was newly arranged, and the frontiers did not extend far. There were severe restrictions placed on the people, who were forbidden to go abroad into foreign parts. Just then the governor of Liang-Chow was called Li-ta-liang. Obedient to the Royal mandate he strictly adhered to the rules of prohibition. And now there came a man who addressed Liang thus:--"There is a priest here from Chang'an who is intending to go to the western regions-I do not know his plans." Liang, full of anxiety, called the Master of the Law to his presence and asked him the object of his arrival. The Master replied, "I wish to go to the West to seek for the law," Linn herring this, uracd him to return to the capital.

¹ For the Sanscrit equivalents of these and other titles, vide Index to the Records of the Western World.

There was then at Lam-chow a Master of the law called Hwar-wer, the most renowned of all a mests of the tegion West of the River, for his spiritual perception and vast abilities. He greatly admired the profound reasonme of the Master of the Law, and hearing of his intention to go in search of the law, he was very greatly rejoiced Secretly sending two of his describes, one called Hwm-lin, the other Jaou-chin, he hade them conduct the Master in secret towards the West

From this time he dare not be seen in public-during the daytime he hid himself, at night he went on

In process of time he came to Kwa-chow, the governor To-Kin having heard of his coming was greatly pleased. ond provided him with all necessary provisions in plenty.

The Master of the Law mourning os to the Western roads, he was told in reply that north from this point fifts Is or more there was the river Iln-lu. the lower part of which is nide, the upper course narrow. Its stream is very impetuous and suddenly becomes deep, so that no boat can pass over it. On the upper part is fixed the Yuh-men barrier, so that one must pass by this; thus it is the ker to the Western frontiers North-west beyond the barrier there are five signal towers in which officers, charged to watch, dwell-they are one hundred h apart. In the space between them there is neither water nor herb Beyond the five towers stretches the desert called Mo-Kia-Yen, on the frontiers of the kingdom of I-gu.

On hearing these particulars he was filled with onxiets and distress. His horse was dead, and he did not know what steps to take; he remained there a month or so, sad and silent. Before his departure there came certain spies from Liang-chow, who said: "There is a priest called Hiuen-Tsiang who is purposing to enter on the Si-Fan territory. All the governors of provinces and districts are ordered to detain him." The Governor of the Province, Li-chang, was a man of a religious turn (a man of religion and faith), and he suspected in his heart that the Master of the Law was (the person named); accordingly he secretly brought the mandate and showing it to Hiuen-Tsiang he said: "Is not the Master the person here named?" The Master of the Law hesitated and made no reply; on which Chang said: "The Master ought to speak the truth, and your disciple will make some plan for you to escape." The Master of the Law then replied truthfully. Chang, hearing it, was filled with admiration and surprise: and then he said, "Since the Master is indeed capable of such a project, I will for his sake destroy the document;" and forthwith he tore it up before him. "And now, Sir," he said, "you must depart in all haste."

From this time his anxieties and fears greatly increased. Of the two novices who accompanied him, one, called Taou-ching, returned at once to Tun-hwang; the other, called Hwui-Lin, alone remained, but because the Master knew that he had not strength for so distant a journey he let him also return. He now procured a horse by exchange; his only sorrow was that he had no guide to accompany him. On this he proceeded to the temple where he was staying, and bowing before the image of Maitrêya he fervently prayed that he would find him a guide who would lead him past the barrier.

That night there was a foreign priest in the temple who had a dream. His name was Dharma, and in his dream he saw the Master sitting on a lotus flower and going towards the West. Dharma was lost in surprise, and on the morrow he told his dream to the Master of the Law, whose heart was rejoiced thereat, taking it as a sign of his being able to go. He answered Dharian, however, thus: "Dreams are vain and deceptive what need is there to examine into this matter?" Again ho entered the Sacred precinct and worshipped in prayer

And now suddenly a foreign person came into the temple to wership Buddhi, after doing which he sainted the Master of the Law by turning round him three times. The Master then asked him his family name is Shi my personal name, on which he said, "My family name is Shi my personal name is Pan to (Bandha!)". The foreigner then asked to be allowed to take on him the five Rules, and living done so he was greatly rejoiced, and asked permission to come back, after a little while he returned with cakes and frint. The Master of the Law observing his intelligence and strong build, and also his respectful manner, accordingly spoke to him about his purpose to go westwards. The foreigner readily acquiesced, and said he would conduct the Master beyond the five signal towers. The Master of the Law was filled with 1991, and gave him some clothes and other property to exchange for a horse, and appointed a time of meeting.

On the morrow at sundown he proceeded towards the bush, where shortly afterwards the foreigner with an old grey beard, hkewise a foreign person, riding on a lean horse of a red colour, came to meet him. The Master of the Law was not easy in his mind, on which the young foreigner said. "This venerable grey beard is intimately acquainted with the Western roads, and has gone to and come back from Legu more than thirty times. I have therefore brought him to 50 with you, hoping it may give you assurance." Then the senior man said. "The Western roads are difficult and bad, said-streams stretch far and wide, ovil sprites and hot winds, when they come, cannot be avoided numbers of men travelling together, although so many, are misled and lost, how much rather you, sir, going alone! how can you accomplish such a journey? I pray you, weigh the thing with yourself well, and do not trifle with your life."

[.] I That is of a lay disciple.

The Master replied: "This poor priest (i.e., Hinen-Tsiang) aims to reach the Western world to search after the great Law—if he does not in the end reach the land of the Brahmans—there is no return to the Eastward, it matters not if he dies in the mid-route."

The foreign greybeard then said: "If, sir, you will go you must ride this horse of mine: he has gone to and fro to I-gu some fifteen times. He is strong and knows the road; your horse, sir, is a small one and not suitable for the journey."

The Master of the Law then recalled to himself the following circumstance: when he was at Chang'an forming his purpose of visiting the Western world, one day there was a diviner named Ho-wang-ta, who by reciting spells and prognosticating, could tell a great deal about the matters in which one was engaged. The Master of the Law requested him to prognosticate about his journey. Ta said, "Sir! you may go; the appearance of your person as you go is that of one riding an old red horse, thin and skinny; the saddle is varnished, and in front it is bound with iron."

Now having observed that the horse which the old foreigner was riding was lean and of a red colour, and that the varnished saddle was bound with iron, agreeing with the words of the diviner, he made up his mind that this was the fulfilment of the augury, and accordingly he exchanged his horse. The old greybeard was much rejoiced thereat, and making his respectful obeisance, they separated.

And now having packed his baggage, he went on through the night with the young foreigner. In the third watch they came to the river, and saw the guardhouse called the Yuh-Mên a good way off. At ten li from the barrier the upper stream is not more than ten feet wide; on each side there is a scrub composed of the Wu-tung tree; the foreigner, cutting down some wood, made a bridge and spread over it branches, filling it up with said. Thus they led over the horses and went on.

The Master of the Law hoving cro sed the river was filled with joy. Being fatigued, he dismounted and sought some repose. The foreign guido also, separated about fifty preces or so from the Moster, spread his mat on the ground and so they both slept. After a while the guido took his knife in his head, and rising np, approached towards the Master of the Law, when about ten prees off, he turned round. Not knowing what his intention was, and being in doubt about the matter, the Master rose from his mat and repeated some Scripture, and called on Kican-yan Bödlinsativa. The foreigner having seen this went back, and slept.

At the first dawn of day the Master called to him and bado him fetch water. Having washed and taken some little food, he purposed to go onwards. The guide said. "Your disciplo is leading you forward on a way full of danger and very remote, there is no water or grass, only beyond the fifth tower there is water. It will be necessary to go there at night time and get the water and pass on, . But if at any one place we are perceived, we are dead men! Is it not better to return and be at rest?" The Moster of the Law having positively refused to return, they both went forward 2 the guide), with his kinfe drawn and his bow string, begged the Master to go on m front, but the Master of the Law would not consent to the proposal Tho foreigner going by himself, after a few h stopped and said "Your disciple can go no further-he has great family concerns to attend to, and he is not willing to transgress the laws of his country" The Master of the Law, knowing his purpose, let hum go back

¹ So Julien translates it; but I think the meaning is, that water could only be found in the neighbourhood (under) the fite watch towers

² The expression denotes that the guide kept looking up and down

The young foreigner replied: "It is impossible for the Master to carry out his plan: how can you avoid • being seized and brought back?"

The Master of the Law answered: "Though they cause my body to be cut up as small as the very dust, I will never return; and I here take an oath to this."

So the matter rested; he gave the young man his horse as a mark of his obligation to him, and so they parted.

And now, alone and deserted, he traversed the sandy waste; his only means of observing the way being the heaps of bones and the horse-dung, and so on; thus slowly and cautiously advancing, he suddenly saw a body of troops, amounting to several hundreds, covering the sandy plain; sometimes they advanced and sometimes they halted. The soldiers were clad in fur and felt. And now the appearance of camels and horses, and the glittering of standards and lances met his view; then suddenly fresh forms and figures changing into a thousand shapes appeared, sometimes at an immense distance and then close at hand, and then they dissolved into nothing.

The Master of the Law when he first beheld the sight thought they were robbers, but when he saw them come near and vanish, he knew that they were the hallucinations of demons.² Again, he heard in the void sounds of voices crying out: "Do not fear! do not fear!" On this he composed himself, and having pushed on eighty li or so, he saw the first watch-tower. Fearing lest the lookouts should see him, he concealed himself in a hollow of sand until night; then going on west of the tower, he saw the water; and going down, he drank and washed his hands. Then as he was filling his water-vessel with water an arrow whistled past

¹ That is, probably, the horse on which the young man rode, see p. 15.
2 For a similar account, vide Rawlinson. Ancient Monarchies, iii. 49.

³ The account of the illusions witnessed in these deserts, would suggest the connection of the Chinese symbols Mo-kia with the word Maga. [Mokia-ucn, however, is the Chinese form of the (Takla) Makán desert.]

him and just grazed his knee, and in a moment another arrow. Knowing then that he was discovered, he crud with a loud voice. 'I am a priest come from the capital do not shoot mol'. Then he led his horse towards the tower, whilst the men on guard opening the gite, came out, after looking it him they saw that he was indeed a priest, and so they entered in together to see the commander of the guard-house, whose name was Wang-sang. Wang having ordered the fire to be well lit up for the purpose of inspecting the Master, said. 'This is no priest of our country of Ho si,' he is indeed one from the capital.' then he asked him about his object in travelling.

The Master of the Law replied "Captain! have you not heard men of Liang-chow talk about in priest named Himen-Tsiang, who was about to proceed to the country of the Brahinnis to seek for the Law? He answered "I have heard that Himen-Tsiang has returned already to the East. Why have you come here?" The Master of the Law then took him to his horse, and showed him vinous places on which were written his name and familiar title. On this the other was convinced. He then sud "Sir, the western road is dangerous and long you cannot succeed in your plan. But I have no least to find with you. I myself am a man of Tunhwang and I will conduct you there. There is a Master of the Law there called Chang-kian, he reveres men of virtue (sages) and honours the priesthood he will be rejoiced to see you. I ask your consent to this."

The Master of the Law replied 'My britiplace is Lo yang, from a child I have been zealous for religion, in both capitals all those engaged in the study of the Law, in Wu and Shuh the most eminent priests without exception have come to me for instruction, for their sakes I have explained and discussed and preached on religion, and I may boldly say that I am the leading authority of the time. If I wished for further renown and encouragement, should I seek a patron at Tunhwang? But being afflicted because I found the sacred books of the religion of Buddha were not always in agreement, and were imperfect, forgetful of my own comfort and disregarding all dangers, I have sworn to go to the West to seek for the Law bequeathed to the world. But you, my patron, instead of rousing me to effort in my undertaking, would exhort me rather to turn back and give it up. How then can you profess to have in common with myself a distaste for the follies of life, and wish with me to plant the seed, leading to Nirvâna? But if you must needs detain me here—let me be punished with death! Hiuen-Tsiang will never return one step to the East, nor give up his first intention!"

Siang, hearing these words, filled with emotion, said: "I am indeed fortunate in having met with you! How can I but rejoice? But now, sir, you are fatigued and worn; take some sleep before the day dawns. I will then myself conduct you, and show you the proper route." He then spread out a mat for him to rest upon.

When the morning came, the Master of the Law having taken some food, Siang sent a man to fill his water-vessel, and providing him with some cakes made of flour, he himself conducted him for ten li or so, and then he said:—"From this point, sir, the road goes straight on to the fourth watch-tower; the man there is a goodhearted person; moreover, he is a near relation of mine. His family name is Wang, his private name is Pi-lung. When you come to see him you can say that I have sent you to him." Then, with tearful salutations, they parted.

Having gone on till night he came to the fourth watch-tower, and fearing lest he should be detained (the danger of detention), he purposed to get some water quietly, and to go on. Coming to the water, and scarcely there, there came an arrow flying towards him; turning round he called out as before, and went forward to the

when he recited this Sûtra,1 at the sound of the words they all disappeared in a moment. Whenever he was in danger, it was to this alone that he trusted for his safety and deliverance.

After going a hundred li or so, he lost his way, and searching for the fountain called Ye-ma he could not find it, to get water from. Then when he was going to drink from the pipe of his water-vessel, because of its weight it slipped from his hands, and the water was wasted; thus, a supply enough for 1000 li was lost in a moment.2 Then again, because of the winding character of the road, he did not know which way to follow it. At length, purposing to return eastward to the fourth watch-tower, after going ten li, he thought thus within himself, "I made a vow at the first that if I did not succeed in reaching India I would never return a step to the East; what then am I now doing here? is better to die in the attempt to go to the West, than to live by returning to the East." Then turning his bridle he invoked Kwan-Yin, and proceeded in a north-west direction.

At this time (as he looked) in the four directions, the view was boundless; there were no traces either of man or horse, and in the night the demons and goblins raised fire-lights as many as the stars; in the day-time the driving wind blew the sand before it as in the season of But notwithstanding all this his heart was unaffected by fear; but he suffered from want of water, and was so parched with thirst that he could no longer go forward. Thus for four nights and five days not a drop of water had he to wet his throat or mouth; his stomach was racked with a burning heat, and he was well-nigh thoroughly exhausted. And now not being able to advance he lay down to rest on the sands, invoking

This Sûtra is regarded by the Chinese as a Mantra, or charm, to the present day. One of my native teachers (when I was in China), although he professed to despise Buddhism, used to repeat it from memory.

2 Yih-chiu = in a trice.

Kican-Yan without intermission, nithough worn out with sufferings. And as he addressed the Bodhisattia, he said :- " Hiven-Tarang in adventuring this journey does not seek for riches or worldly profit, he desires not to acquire fame, but only for the sake of the highest religions truth does his heart long to find the true Law know that the Bollusattan loanely regards all living creatures to deliver them from inserv! Will not mine. b tter as they are, come to his knowledge!"

Thus he sunke, (praying) with carnest heart and without cessation the while, till the middle of the fifth night, when suddenly a cool wind finned (touched) his body, cold and refreshing as a bath of icy water. His eyes forthwith recovered their power of sight and his horse had strength to get up. His body being thus refreshed, he lay still and fell asleep for a little while. Whilst he slept thus he had a dream, and in his sleep he thought he gaw a mighty spiritual being, several chang! in height, holding in his hand a halberd used for signalling, who spake thus Why are you still sleeping and not pressing on with all your might?"

The Master of the Law, rousing himself from simber, pushed on for ten le, when his horse suddenly started off another was and could not be brought back or turned. Having gone some h in the new direction, he saw all at once several acres of green grass, getting off his horse, he let him graze, when leaving the grass, purposing to resume his journey, about ten prees off he came to a pool of water, sweet, and bright as a mirror, dismounting again, he drank without stint, and so his body and vital powers were restored once more, and both man and horse obtained refreshment and case. Now we may conclude that this water and grass were not natural supplies, but undoubtedly were produced through the loving pity of Bôdhisattva, and it is a proof of his guileless character and spiritual power 2

¹ A chang is = 141 I nglish inches 3 This passage is apparently parenthetical and is not translated by Julien.

Having bivouacked near the grass and fountain of water for a day, on the day following he filled his water-vessel and cut some grass, and proceeded onward. After two days more they got out of the desert and arrived at I-gu. The myriads of dangers and difficulties through which he passed cannot be recounted in detail. Having arrived at I-gu, he stopped in a temple where there were three Chinese priests; one was an old man whose vestment was without any girdle, and whose feet were bare. Coming forth, he embraced the Master of the Law, with many cries and piteous exclamations which he could not restrain; but at length he said, "How could I have hoped at this time, ever to have seen again a man of my own country?" The Master of the Law likewise, as he saw him, was moved to tears.

The foreign priests outside, and the foreign kings also, came to pay their respects to him (i.e. Hinen-Tsiang). The king invited him to his own house and provided him with abundance of entertainment.

At this time the king of Kau-chang, Khio-wen-t'ai, had previously sent some messengers to I-gu, and on this day as they were about to return they met the Master of the Law. Accordingly when they had got back they told the king (of his arrival). The king hearing it, immediately sent messengers to order the king of I-gu to send the Master of the Law to him. Moreover the king selected. several tens of superior horses and sent his officers and chief ministers to escort him to his presence. After the usual delay of ten days, the king's messengers came and explained the king's plan, and then they earnestly besought him to comply with the arrangement. The Master of the Law had purposed in his mind to take (the road leading) post the Mausoleum (Fron-tu, Stupa) of the Khan, but now, notwithstanding his respectful refusal of the king of Kan-chang's request, he could not escape from it -and so was obliged to go. Crossing the southern deers, after six days they came to the borders of Kauchang to the town of Priels. And now, the sim just see, the Master of the Law wieled to stop in this town, but the magnetrates and the mes enjers as i, "The rosal city is near—we beg you to advance—there are several relays of homes in front." The Master of the Law left his old red horse which he had ridden but left before, to be sent on afterwards and then in the millife of the might they reached the myal city. The effect of the grant in the gate having informed the king, he commanded the gate to be opened.

When the Master of the Law entered the city, the king surrounded by his attendants in front and rear, bearing highted torches came forth in person to need him. The Master of the Law having entered the inner hall took his seet beneath a precious entopy in a partial of two stages. After salutation the Jung and in a most agreeable manner, "From the time that I knew of your benous's name, my happiness has presented me from sleeping or exting, after calculating the distance of the road, I was sure you would arrive to night, and then fore my wife and children with mys If have taken no sleep, but reading the Stered Bool's, have awaited your minual with respect."

A moment after, the queen, with several tens of servant-women, came in to pay her respects

And now as the day-dawn came on, he said. 'Altern fatiguing journey. I have a wish to sleep." The line herenpon retired to his value and left soveral cumuchs to wait on him during the night.

Then in the morning b fore the Master of the Law had arisen, the king in person, with the queen also, and her followers, waiting below, came to the door to solute him after which the king said "Year disciple (i.e. the king) caunot but that how wonderful it is that you by yourself alone should have been able to surmount the difficulties and dangers of the road in coming hither." And in saying these words he could not refrain from tears and exclamations of wonder. After this he ordered food to be provided according to the rules of religion. Moreover, by the side of the palace there was an oratory to which the king himself conducted the Master of the Law and installed him there. Moreover, he commissioned certain cunuchs to wait on him and guard him.

In this convent there was a certain Master of the Law called Tün who formerly studied at Chang'an and was well versed in the details of religion. The king, who highly esteemed him, commissioned him to go visit the Master of the Law. After a short interview he left, on which the king again ordered a Master of the Law called Kwo-tong-wang, about eighty years of age, to take up his residence with the Master of the Law, with a view to persuade him to remain where he was and not to go to the Western regions. The Master of the Law was unwilling to assent, and after ten days' delay he wished to be allowed to go on his way. The king said: "I have already commissioned the Master Tong to confer with you and request you to remain here. What, sir, is your intention?"

The Master replied, "To request me to remain here is surely an act of goodness on the part of the king, but truly my heart cannot consent."

The king replied: "When I travelled in the great country (i.e. China) with my teacher during the Sui emperors' time, I visited in succession the Eastern and Western capitals, and the country between Yen-tai and Fen-tsin and I saw many renowned priests, but my heart felt no affection for them: but from the time I heard the name of the Master of the Law my body and soul have been filled with joy, my hands have played and my feet have danced. Let me persuade you, sir, to remain with me here. I will provide for your wants to the end of my life, and I will undertake that all the people of my realm shall become your disciples, if, as I hope, you on your past will instruct them. The priests and ther followers, although not numerous still amount to several thousands. I will cause them to take the Sacred book in hand (which ; u wled) and to attend with the rist to your instructions. I true you acc do to my desire and earnest require, and do not think of geing on your journey to the West

The Master, in declining the mustation, and "How can I, a poor mid solitary priest sufficiently acknowledge the ling's generouty But I undertook this journey not with a view to receive religious offerings. Grieved at the imperfect knowledge of religion in my native hind. and the promess and defective condition of the Sacred Texts, and being myself agitated by doubts as to the truth. I determined to so and find out the truth for invect Hence at the risk of my life I have set out for the West, to inquire after interpretations not yet known. My purpose is that the sweet den of the expanded lan shall not only water Kamla, but that the mysterious words may also spread through the regions of the Last. thought of finding my way through the mountains and my extract desire to seek a friend of illustrious ability. this has, day by day, strengthened my purpose, why then would you cause me to stop imdway! I pray your mujests to change your raind and do not everpower me with an excessive friendship."

The ling replied, "I am maved by an overpowering affection towards you , and the Master of the Law must stop hero and receive my religious offerings Ling Mountries may fall down, but my purpose caunot change Be assured of my smeerity and do not doubt my real affection"

The Master of the Law answered "What need is there of so many words to prove the deep regard the king has for me? But Hiuen-Tsiang has come to the West for the sake of the Law, and as he has not yet obtained his object he cannot halt in the middle of his enterprise. Wherefore I respectfully request to be excused, and that your majesty would put yourself in my place. Moreover, your august majesty in days gone by has prepared an excellent field of merit, and so has become a ruler of men. Not only are you the preserver and sustainer of your subjects, but you are also the protector of the doctrine of Buddha. It is only reasonable therefore that you should support and disseminate (the principles of religion). How then is it that you are now opposing that end?"

¹ Fang teng anexpression (omitted to the breakth and width" (square) by Jul co) commonly used for the equally of the class of book Cf Vaipulya class of Stars It points the Sc 1 spula.

The king replied: "Never would I venture to place obstacles in the way of the diffusion of Religion; but because my realm has no teacher and guide, I would therefore detain the Master of the Law, in order that he may convert the ignorant and foolish."

But the Master of the Law continued to excuse himself and would not consent (to remain).

Then the king, colouring with anger and stretching out his hand beyond the sleeve, said, in loud words and a menacing manner: "I have a different way of deciding this question, sir! If, sir, you still think you can go when you like, I will detain you here by force and send you back to your own country. I commend you to think over this; it will be better for you to obey."

The Master answered: "Hinen-Tsiang has come here for the sake of the great Law, indeed! and now I have met with one who opposes me—but you have only power over my body, your majesty cannot touch my will or my spirit."

And now he could speak no more on account of his frequent sighs, but the king remained unmoved; still he caused an additional supply of necessary provisions, and each day he pressed on him food provided from the king's own store.

The Master of the Law, seeing that he would be detained by force in opposition to his original design, declared with an oath that he would eat nothing, in order to affect the king's heart. So he sat in a grave posture, and during three days he neither ate nor drank, on the fourth day the king seeing that the Master was becoming finiter and fainter, overcome with shaine and sorrow, he bowed down to the ground before him and said "The Master of the Law has free parinission to go to the West I I pray you take a slight morning meal!"

The Master of the Law still fearing his insincerity,

The Muster of the Law still fearing his insincerity, required him to repeat his words with his hand pointing to the sun. The king answered. If it needs be so, let us both go into the presence of Buddha, and bind ourselves mutually together? Accordingly they went both together into the sacred precinct and paid adoration to Buddha. With them was the royal mother, and the Empress Chang. So regarding the Master of the Law as a brother, he gave him free permission to go and seek for the Law. "But," he added, when you return I request you to stop in this kingdom for three years to receive my offeriags, and if in future ages you arrive at the condition of a Buddha, grant that I, like Prasenyita or Bimbasaa rays, may be permitted to protect and patronise you!"

Then he invited him to remun one month and to expound the Sutra called Jin-wang-pan-jo, in order that danng the interval the king inight prepare travelling garments for the Master. The Master giving his full consent the empress was greatly rejoiced and desired to be connected with the Master in close relationship during successive ages.

¹ Cf Namuos Catalogue No 17

Then the Master consented to eat · (from this we can see) the firmness of his will and determination.

And now on a day following the king prepared a large pavilion for the purpose of beginning the religious conferences; the pavilion could seat three hundred persons or so; the empress sat on the right of the king; the masters and chief nobles, all took different seats, to attend the preaching.

Every day at the time of preaching, the king himself conducted the Master, preceding him with a brazier containing incense. When ascending the pulpit the king, humbly bowing, placed his foot-stool and begged him to mount and be seated. Day by day this was done. After the sermon he begged the Master of the Law to arrange for four Śrâmaneras to wait upon him and to. make thirty priests' vestments; and considering that the western regions are very cold, he had various articles of clothing made suitable for such a climate, such as facecoverings, gloves, leather boots, and so on. Moreover he gave him a hundred gold ounces, and three myriads of silver pieces, with five hundred rolls of satin and taffeta, enough for the outward and home journey of the Master during twenty years. He gave him also thirty horses and twenty-four servants (hand-helps). Moreover he commissioned Hun-Sin, one of the imperial censors belonging to his court, to conduct him to the Khan Yeh-hu. 1 Again he composed twenty-four official documents to be presented at Kiu-chi and twenty-four different countries; each letter had a large roll of satin, accompanying it as a credential. Lastly, he loaded two conveyances with five hundred pieces of satin and taffeta, and fruit of luscious taste, as a present for the Khan Yeh-hu. Accompanying this present was a letter to the following purport: "The Master of the Law, a friend of your humble servant, desires to search for the Law in the country of the Bribianus. I beseach the Khan to lo hind to him, as he has ever been hind to me, his humble servant." He requested also that he would require the rulers of the different countries of the West to conduct the Master through their territories and provide relays of horses.

¹ Julien has Che-hu, and probably this is not so much a personal name, he is right. It appears to me that as a titular rank.

The Master of the Law, seeing that the king sent the novices, and these letters, and the silks and satins, &c, with him, was overpowered by a sense of his extraordinary liberality, and made the following grateful oration to him. saving —

Hiuen-Tsiang has heard that whoever would traverse the deep expanse of ecean or river must use boat and our-so those who would rescue (quide) the body of living creatures engulphed (in ignorance), must avail themselves of the hely words (of Buddha) Now for this cause Tatha ata, exercising his great love as of one towards an only son, was born on this much-polluted earth, reflecting in himself the wisdom of the three enlightenments (viduas), and as the sun illuminating tho darkness The cloud of his love hovered over the summit of the heavens of the universe, and the rain of the law watered the borders of the three thousand worlds (the Chiliocosm) After procuring advantage and quiet, ho quitted the world for the state of true peace-and his bequeathed doctrine has spread Lastwards for six hundred years past His illustrious doctrine stretched through the country of Hu and Lo, and has shone as a radiant star in Tsin and Lian.

'In agreement with the mysterious character of this doctrine the world has progressed in its higher destiny, only distant people coming to interpret the doctrine (the sounds of his doctrine) are not in agreement. The time of the Holy One is remote from us and so the sense of his doctrine is differently expounded but as the taste of the fruit of different trees of the same kind is the same.

so the principles of the schools as they now exist are not different. The contentions of the North and South have indeed for many hundred years agitated our land with doubts, and no able master has been found able to dispel them.

"Hiuen-Tsiang owing to his former deserts was privileged at an early date to adopt the religious life, and till he had completed about twenty years, received instruction from his masters. The famous sages and eminent friends were all carefully consulted and questioned by him. The principles of the Great and Little Vehicle were each briefly investigated by him.

"His hand never ceased to examine the different Sacred Books, but notwithstanding all his pains he was never free from doubts, until, wearied with his perplexities, he longed to wend his way to the monastery of the Jêtavana, and to bend his steps to the Vulture Peak, that he might there pay his adoration and be satisfied as to his difficulties. But at the same time he knew that the heavens could not be measured with an inch-tube, nor the ocean be sounded by a cock's feather.

"But he could not give up the purpose which humbly inspired him with resolution, and so making preparation he set out on his way, and through much painful travel arrived at I-gu.

"I respectfully desire that your majesty, possessed of the harmonising influences of heaven and earth, and inspired by the soothing power of the two principles,¹ may exercise your authority with advantage to all your subjects. Your renown stretches to the East as far as China, to the West the hundred tribes of uncivilised people, the lands of Leou-lan and of the Yue-ti, the districts of Kiu-sse and Long-wang, all acknowledge your profound virtues, and are obliged to you for your condescending qualities, and in addition, your respect for learned men and your lose for crudition, exhibit themselves in your losing attention to their advantage

¹ That is, as it would seem, the two principles that pervade Nature; the yang and vin.

"Il wmg learned of my arrival, your majesty has been graciously pleased to order the escorts, and provisions for my entertainment Since I came your goodness bas continually mereased and you have allowed me to disconrec publicly on religious subjects. You have moreover condescended to allow me the title of 'brother,' and have entrusted me with letters of recommendation to the Princes of twenty and more Lingdoms of the West. you have invited them to show me consideration and kindness, and ordered them to provide me with necessary escort and provisions in proceeding from one district to another I verted by puty for the wants of a poor pil grim who is finding his way to Western countries, and on account of the regores of the climate which will affect him on his fourney, you have ordered four novices to accompany him, and you have provided for his uso religious vestments, pudded en s, boots, and other inticles of clothing

Lastly, you have added gifts of silks and tailetas, and a larg quantity of money, gold and silver, to provide for his wants during twenty years in coming and going I am overpowered by a senso of my obligation, and know not how to return sufficient thanks. The waters of the united livers do not equal in amount your royal gifts, the Ising ling mountains are small and light compared with the abundance of your benefits

"What anyous four can I now have in facing the prisage of the ice-bound glaciers? — no anxiety will afflict me lest I should be too late to pay my reverence at the spots where stand "the heavenly ladder ' (at Kapatha), and "the tree of wisdom" (at Gâyâ) By acceding to my wishes you have placed me under this obligation, and to your kind offices all is due from their mouths the explanation of the true doctrine, I shall return to my own country and there translate the books I have obtained. Thus shall be spread abroad a knowledge of unknown doctrines; I shall unravel the tangle of error and distroy the misleading influences of falso teaching; I shall repair the deficiencies of the bequeathed doctrine of Buddha, and fix the aim of the my-terious teaching (of the schools).

"After questioning the different masters and receiving

¹ Julien gives the leftow River, with himay be right ferring, probably to the Muzart lass

"Perchance by these meritorious works I may in some degree repay your large beneficence—but considering the greatness of the task before me (the distance of the real), I can delay no further; to-morrow I must take beave of your maje ty, and this can exime much pain.

"I can only, in consideration of your majesty's goodness,

BOOK 11.

Connectionally Ober or to be rath Kiego Levelo (Kaszel)

From this, going westward, he came to the kingdom of O-limi; 1 lere is the formitum of A-fu? the Moster The formation is estimated to the routh of the road on a sink Lillich. The laffect is several char ; in height, and the water comes from the ball hall way up

The tradition says There was formerly a band of nerdrature, several handred in number, who found their supply of water exhausted on their mid journey Arrying at the point exhausted and norm out, they Lnew not what to do At this time there was a praist in their company, who had brought no provisions for the journey, but relied on the alms of the rest for his support. The others considering the case, said: "This priest serves linddles; on this account we, as a company, give him our ofkrings. Although he has travelled ten thousand li he has had no provision of his own-and now, whilst we are full of anxiety, he is unmoved by any care: we ought to ask him about it."

The priest, in reply to their question, said: "You, sirs, who are auxious to get a supply of water, ought each one of you to adore Buddha, and receive the three Refuges and take on you the five moral obligations. Then I will, for your sakes, ascend youder hill and cause a supply of water to proceed from it."

The entire company, having arrived at such a condition of distress, agreed to his order, and received the rules of moral obligation; after which the priest instructed them thus: "After I have gone up the hill you must cry out 'A-fu-sse! cause water to flow down for our use! enough to sustain us." With these words he left them. After a little while the company called out and requested, as he had instructed them. In a moment the water began to descend in supplies sufficient for their necessity.

¹ Cl Records of the Western World. 2 Possibly connected with the Sc. vol L p 17 22 AP OF ALIE

The whole congregation were filled with joy and gratitude; but as the Master did not return they went in a body up the hill to see what had happened, and found that he was dead (become extinct). And now having wept and lamented, they burnt his body according to the rules of the Western world; on the place where they found him they collected stones and made a tower, which still exists. Moreover, the water has not ceased to flow, but, according to the number of the travellers who pass by this place, it flows down for their use, in small or large supply. If there is no one there, the fountain dries up (is a mere secretion).

The Master of the Law, with the rest, passed the night near the fountain. At sunrise he went on and crossed the "Silver Mountain." This mountain is very high and extensive. It is from this place that the silver is dug which supplies the Western countries with their silver currency.

On the west of the mountain he encountered a band of robbers; after giving them what they demanded, they departed.

After a little they came to the place of the site of the royal city, and passed the night by the side of a stream. At this time some foreign merchants in their company, to the number of several tens, coveting an early sale of their merchandise, privately went forward in the middle of the night. Scarcely had they gone ten li when they met a land of roblers who mudered every one of them. And re, when the Master of the Law and the others come to the place, they found their dead belies there, but all their riches gone; they passed on, deeply affected with the sight, and shortly afterwards they saw the royal cut before them.

The king of O-ki-ni (cath his emainters) coming forth to meet (the Moster of the Law), conducted him, and invited him to enter (the Police) as his goest. This country formerly was subjected to attacks from brigands belonging to Kau-chang, and as there was still all feeling (lettern the two construct, the king) was not willing to provide an except.

The Master of the Law, stopping one light, went forwards and crossed a greatrise. To the west be traversed a tied valley, and after going several hundred It he arrived at the borders of the ling loon of Kinseln [formerly written Kinistin, but incorrectly]. As he approached the capital, the ling, accompanied by his ministers and a celebrated priest called Mochriskinsto (Mel daggyta, or Mol dakhita) came forth to meet him; other priests, to the number of several thousands, had remained at the eastern gate of the city, outside which they had created a wide floating parillon (pointed tile a tent), and having brought the images (of Buddha) in procession, with sounds of music, had placed them there.

The Master of the Law having arrived, the priestarising to meet him, address d him in affectionate language, and then each one retinized to his seat. They then caused a priest to offer to the Master of the Law a bouquet of flowers freshly gathered. The Master of the Law having accepted it, advanced before the image of Buddha, scattering the flowers and offering wership. After this Mokshagupta took his seat beside him. The two being reated, the priests again formed a precession with flowers (in their hands), after which they offered grape juice as they passed. Having this accepted flowers and grape juice in the first temple, he next received the same in the other temples, and thus going the round, the day began to decline, and the priests and their attendants gradually dispersed.

¹ As Julien remarks, we must remember that Hiuen-Talang was accompanied by an escort from Kau chang.

There were several decades of men belonging to Kauchang who had become monks in K'in-chi; they dwelt apart in one particular temple; this temple was to the south-east of the city. As the Master of the Law came from their native country, they were the first to invite him to stop the night with them. Because he accepted this invitation the king and the priests returned each to his own abode. The next day the king invited him to pass over to his palace to receive every kind of religious offerings and the three pure aliments.1 The Master of the Law would not accept them, at which the king was very vexed; the Master of the Law replied, "This is the license granted by the 'gradual' system of the Law; but the Great Vehicle in which Hinen-Tsiang has been instructed, does not admit of it. I will accept the other reserved food."

Having finished his repast, he proceeded in a north-west direction from the city to the temple called 'O-she li-ni² where the priest Mokshagnpta resided. Gupta by his rare ability and intelligence had acquired the respect of all the different schools of religion. He had travelled in India for twenty years and more, learning (the Sacred Books). Although he had gone through all the Sûtras, yet he excelled in the knowledge of the Shing-ming (Śābdavidyā Sûtra). The king and the people of the kingdom were all affected by the utmost respect for him, and had named him Tuh-po (without equal). When he saw the Master of the Law come to his abode, he received him with the politer a due to a guest, not I nowing as yet his advinced acquaintance with religion

¹ For the "three pure aliments," and the "gradual system," vide Julii, 2 n.

² Vide Records, &c., vol. i., p. 22 n.

Addressing the Master of the Law, he said. 'In this but I we have the Tsa-sm. the Kut she, the Pi-sha, and other Sutras, you can gain sufficient I nowledge by studying there here, without troubling vourself to voyage to the West, encountering all sorts of dangers."

The Master of the Law replied "And have you here the Yoga-Si tri or not !"

He answered What need ask about such an heretical book as that? The true disciple of Buddha does not study such a work 1"

The Master of the Law was at first filled with reverence for the person (of Mol shagur ta) but hearing this rulls he regarded him as dirt and answering said "In our country too we have long had the Vibhasha and Kosha, but I have been sorry to observe their logic superficial and their language weak they do not speak of the lughest perfection On this account I have come so far as this, desiring to be instructed in the Yoga Sastra belonging to the Great Vehicle And the Yoga, what is it but the revelation of Maitreya the Bodhisattva next to become Buddha flit, the last nersonal Bodha sattra), and to call such a book heretical, how is it you are not afrud of the bottomless pit?"

The other replied "You have not yet understood the Vibhāshā and the other Satras, how can you say they do not contain the deep principles of religion?"

The Master replied "Do you, sir, at present understand them?' He answered, "I have a complete knowledge of them'

The Master then cited the beginning of the Kôsha, and asked him to continue Forthwith he began to blunder, and as he came at last to a dead stop, he

¹ Samyuktabi idarma.

The Kosl a
The Vibhasl a.

⁴ The lighest perfection incul cated by the Joga system of Bud dhism is union with the supreme object of worship changed colour, and said with perturbation: "You may question me on some other portion of the work."

Then he referred to another passage, but neither could he recite this, but said: "The Sastra has no such passage as the one you name." Now at this time the king's uncle, called Chi-Yueh, had become a monk and was well acquainted with Sîtras and Sîstras; he was on this occasion seated by the side (of Hinen-Tsiang). Forthwith, he testified (to the correctness of the quotation), in these words: "This passage is really taken from the Sastra;" and then, taking the original, he read it out.

Mokshagupta on this was exceedingly abashed and said: "I am getting old and forgetful."

He was questioned also regarding the other Sûtras, but could give no correct explanation.

And now, as the snow-passes of Mount Ling were not yet open, the Master could not advance, but was obliged to remain, for sixty days or so, detained by this circumstance. On going out to observe the condition of the roads, if they happened to meet together and speak (i.e. the Master and Mokshagupta), he did not sit down, but spoke either standing, or as if anxious to pass on. And in a private way he addressed the people and said: "This monk of China is not an easy man to discuss with; if he goes to India the younger class of disciples will be unwilling to present themselves (i.e. for discussion or cxamination).

So much was the Master feared by him and admired.

The day of his departure having come, the king gave him servants and camels and horses, and attended by monks and laymen belonging to the capital, he accompanied him for a good distance.

Going west from this two days' journey, he encountered about 2000 Turkish (Tuh-Kiueh) robbers on horseback;

th v were in the act of dividing among thems lives the both they had got from a caravan and when they could not agree they began to fight among themselves and so were disserted.

Then come forward 600 h they crossed a small desert and arrived at the lan dom of Poh-luh kist f reserie called Kil rell, and stepred there one make Then proceeding north-west and 10 ne 300 fe they cor el a desert and came to the I mg Nountain which forms the northern angle of the I sung I mg range. This mountain is steep and dangerous, and reactes to the clouds (hearen) I rom the creation the perpetual snow which has collected here in piles has been changed into glaciers which melt neither in winter nor summer, the hard-frozen and cold sheets of water rise murghing with the clouds, looking at them the eye is blink I with the glire, so that it cannot long gaze at them. The icy peaks fall down sometimes and he athwart the road, some of their a hundred feet high, and others several tens of feet wide On this account the extreme of flights of chiabits over the first, and the danger of cressure the others. Moreover the wind and the snow driven in confused masses. make it difficult to escare an ier coldness of body though wru ped in heavy folds of fur-bound garments. When desirous of food or sleep there is no dry place to be found for a halt, the only way is to living the jot for cooking, and to spread the mat on the see for sleeping

After seven days they began to get out of the mountain, twelve or fearteen of the company were starved and frezen to death, whilst the number of the oxen and horses that perished was still creater

After leaving the mountains they arrived at the lake called Ising * The ericuit of this lale is 1400 or 1500 h, longer from east to west, nurrower from north to south Looling at the watery expanse the wind sud denly arising swells the waves to a height of several chang.

Following the borders of the sea for about 500 li in a north-west direction, the Master came to the city of Suyeh. Here he encountered the Khan of the Turks called Yeh-hn, who was then engaged on a hunting expedition. The horses of these barbarons people are very fine; the Khan's person was covered with a robe of green satin, and his hair was loose, only it was bound round with a silken band some ten feet in length, which was twisted round his head and fell down behind. He was surrounded by about 200 officers, who were all clothed in brocade stuff, with their hair braided. On the right and left he was attended by independent troops all clothed in furs and fine spun hair garments; they carried lances and bows and standards, and were mounted on camels and horses. The eye could not estimate their numbers.

When they saw each other, the Khan, full of joy, said: "Stay here for a while; after two or three days I will come back." He then directed one of his chief officers, Ta-mo-chi, to conduct him towards a large tent and to arrange things for his comfort. After three days in this residence the Khan returned, and taking the Master of the Law by the hand he conducted him within.

The tent of the Khan is a large pavilion adorned with golden flower ornaments which blind the eye with their glitter. All the officers (Ta kwan) had spread out in front long mats, in two rows, on which they sat; they were clad in shining garments of embroidered silk. The body-guard of the Khan stood behind them. Regarding these circumstances of state, although he was but the ruler of a wandering horde, yet there was a certain dignified arrangement about his surroundings.

The Marter of the Law proceeding towards the tent, when about thirty paces from it, the Khan came forth and conjucted him with reverent condescension within, spriking to him through an interpreter they then entered and were setted.

The Turks wership line they do not use wooden seats, because wood contains line, and so even in worship they mayor seat themselves, but only spread padded mats on the ground and so go through with it. But for the sake of the Master of the Law they brought an iron warming-pin covered with a third padding, at requested him to be seated thereon. A short time afterwards they introduced the Chinese mission and the legites from Kan-chang with their letters of introduction and presents.

The Khan examined for hinself the one and the other and was much pleased thereat, he then ordered the currys to be scated, and caused wine to be offered to them with the sound of music.

The Khan with his ministers drank to the envoys, whilst he caused the juice of the grape 1 to to effered to the Master of the Law. After this they drank one with the other, chilkinging one another in succession, filling their caps and emptying thom in succession, ever more and more animated, during all which time the sounds of all kind of nouse (Kin, Mac, I, de 1 researched in confused drang. And although the character of the innuc was the common sort of the barbarrans, yet it was nevertheless very diverting both to the ear and the eye, pleasing the thoughts and the mind

In a little while there were other articles of food brought ferward, such as boiled quarters of mutten and veal, which were heaped up before the guests but for the Master of the Law they prepared distinct entertainment, consisting of the pure articles of feed such as rice-cakes, creum, sugar candy, honey-sticks (burley sugar?), raisins. &c.

usins, ac

¹ Pu tan of the Greek βότρυν 2 Music of the North South East (Kingsmill) and West (Julien in loc)

When the feast was over they sent round the grapewine again, and then asked the Master of the Law to expound (declare) the doctrines of religion. Then he, with a view to admonish them, spoke upon the subject of the ten precepts (Dasaśilam), love of preserving life, and the Pârâmitas, and works that lead to final deliverance.

Raising his hands, he (the King) humbly prostrated himself to the ground, and joyously accepted the teaching of the Master.

And now having remained there several days, the Khan exhorted him to stop altogether, saying: "Sir; you have no need to go to India (In-tu-kia-kwo); that country is very hot, the tenth month there, is as warm as our fifth month: as I regard your appearance I am afraid you will succumb under the climate. The men there are naked-blacks, without any sense of decorum, and not fit to look at!"

The Master replied: "Notwithstanding all this I desire to go and gaze on the sacred traces, and earnestly to search for the law."

The Khan then ordered inquiry to be made in his army for any one who could speak the Chinese language and that of other countries. So they found a young man who had lived for many years at Chang'an, and thoroughly understood the Chinese language.

He was appointed, under the title of Mo-to-ta-kwan, to prepare letters of commendation for the different countries and to accompany the Master to the kingdom of Kapiśa. Moreover, the Khan gave to Hiuen-Tsiang a complete set of vestments in red satin, and fifty pieces of silk; and then with his officers in person he conducted him a distance of ten li, or so.

From this, going west 400 li or so, he arrived at Ping-yu.² This is also called "The Thousand Springs."

¹ I would call attention to this unusual form for India, and compare the Sindhuka king, named in the "Friendly Letter" of Nagarjuna.
2 Myn-bulak (Bingheul) vide Records, &c., i. 27 n.

BOOK 11]

The district is several bundred in square. There are a multitude of pools and springs here, and also trees wonderful for their luxurunt viriline and height. The cool of freshing moisture undes this a fit place for the Khan, when he would avoid the heat of summer

From Pine-vin advancing westward 150 lt, we come to the town of Ta-le see (Turns) Again going south-west 200 It we come to the town of Peli shwin , again going south-west 200 h, we come to Kong-yu city , again going south 50 h, we come to the kingdom of Nu chih-kien, again going west 200 h, we come to the kingdora of Che shi This means' The stine country," Ch. Ed] This country, on the west, borders on the river behavel (or, She-Shel. Again going west 1000 h or so, we come to the kingdom of Su-tu-li-ee na To the east this kingdom borders on the Yeh-yeh river This river comes from the northern plateru of the Is'ung-Ling Mountains and flows to the north-west. Asam going north-west, we enter on a great desert without water or gress. We advance guided by observing the bones left on the way. After 500 le or so we arrive at the country of Sa-mo-kien, [This means " The happy country"] The king and people do not believo in the law of Buddha, but their religion consists in sacrificing to fire. There are here two religious foundations, but no priests dwell in them If stranger-priests seek shelter therein, the barbarians follow them with burning fire and will not permit them to remain there

The Master of the Law on his first arrival was treated disdamfully by the king, but after the first night's rest, he discoursed for the king's sake on the destiny (cause and consequence) of men and Daws he lauded the incritorious qualities of Buddha he set forth, by way of exhortation, the character of religious ment. The king was rejoiced, and requested permission to take the moral precepts as a disciple, and from that time showed him the highest respect. The two young disciples went to the temple to worship, on which the barbarians again pursued them with burning fire—the two Śrâmaṇêras going back told the king of it. The king hearing it ordered them to arrest the fire-carriers; having done so, he assembled the people and ordered the hands of the culprits to be cut off. The Master of the Law, wishing to exhort them to a virtuous life, would not consent to their bodies being mutilated and so saved them. The king having beaten them severely, expelled them from the city.

¹ For the places named in this section wide Records, de i p 27 ss.

From this circumstance the higher and lower sort of people regarded him respectfully, and as a body sought to be instructed in the faith. Accordingly, having summoned a large assembly, he received many of them into the priesthood and established them in the convents. It was thus that he transformed their badly disposed (heretical) hearts, and corrected their evil customs. And so it was wherever he went.

Again going about 300 li to the west, he arrived at K'iuh-shwang-ni-kia. Again going west 200 li or so, we come 2 to the kingdom of Ho-Han [i.e. "The eastern-rest country," Ch. Ed.] Again going west 400 li, we come to the country of Pu-ho. [This means "The middle-rest country," Ch. Ed.] Again going west 100 li or so, we come to the Fa-ti country. [This means "The western-rest country," Ch. Ed.] Again going west 500 li, we come to the Kingdom of Ho-li-sih-mi-kia (Khwarazm). This country on the East borders on the Po-tsu river (the Oxus). Again going south-west 300 li or so, we come to the country of Kie-shwang-na (Kesh). Again going south-west 200 li, we enter the mountains. The moun-

¹ Kashania.

The Pilgrim did not visit these countries himself, but wrote from hearsay.—Vide Records, i. 34 n.
Bokhara.

⁴ The Si-yu-ki gives 400 li.
5 The Fa-ti or Vati country probably represents the country of the Yue-ti (Vati).

tam road is deep and dangerous, scarcely wide enough in some places for men to pass, and, marcover, without herbage or water, going 300 h or so through the mountains, we enter the Iron Gites. Here the perpendicular precipiece, hile walls on either side, afford but a narrow The stone contains much iton, which is dug out Attached to the wall on either side there is n folding-gate, with many cast-iron lalls suspended above it, hence the name this is the barrier against the advance of the Turks. Passing through the Iron Gates we armye at the country of In-ho-lo [formerly by mistale written To-fo lo, Ch Fd 1 1 rom this, having sone several hundred h, we cross the Oxus, and arrive at the Kingdom of Hwo (Kunduz) This was the residence of the eldest son of the Khan Yeh-hu called Ta-tu-sheh [Sheh is an official title, Ch. Id] It was he who had married the sister of the ling of Kau-chang

Moreover, the king of Kau-chang had sent letters to this place in recommendation of the Master of the Law . on his arrival, the princess Ho kia-tun 2 was dead, and To tu sheh was sick When he heard that the Master of the Law had come from Kan chang with letters for hunself and his wife, he was everyowered with crief thereat, and calling the Master, said "Your humble servant at view of you has received sight! Would that you could remain here a little while, and rest If I should recover my health, I will personnly conduct you to the country of the Brahmma'

At this time, moreover, there was a Briliman priest who had come to recite certain charms-which gradually had the effect of removing (the sickness of the prince) Afterwards he (te the Prince), married the younger sister of the Princess Ho-kia tun She, at the suggestion of her nephen (the son of her sister who was dead), prepared a poison and killed her husband The Sheh being dead, the princess of Knu-chang having only a httle child, the nephew who had the title Télé violently seized the government and became Sheh, after which he married his step-mother.

¹ Or. She hu

² The princers Kho (Julien in loc.)

As the funeral ceremony (of the late prince) was being celebrated, Hiuen-Tsiang was detained for more than a month.

There was then a Śramana called Ta-mo-sang-kia (Dharmasiñha), residing in this country. travelled for instruction to India; beyond the T'sung-ling Mountains on the western side they called him Fa-tsiang (i.e. Artizan of the Law, or law-maker). The priests of Su-leh (Kashgar) and Yu-tin (Khotan) dare not discuss with him. The Master of the Law (Hinch-Tsiang), wishing to know his profound or shallow knowledge, sent messengers to him, to ask how many Sûtras or Śâstras he was able to explain. The disciples who were surrounding him, when they heard the message were piqued-whilst Dharmasiñha answered with a smile: "I can explain any of them you like." Master of the Law, knowing that he did not understand the Great Vehicle, turned his questions to the Vibhasha and other Sûtras belonging to the "Little Vehicle." These questions, not easy to solve, made him allow his inferiority. The disciples were filled with shame. From this time whenever they met, the Śramana was full of expressions of pleasure, and ceased not to praise the Master, acknowledging that he was by no means his equal.

At this time, the new Sheh having been established in his government, the Master of the Law asked him for official envoys to conduct him, and for post-horses (U-lo: Ulak—Jul.), as he desired to go south towards the country of the Brahmans. The Sheh, after consideration, said: "Your disciple among his possessions has the country of Fo-ho-lo (Baktra), bordering northwards on the Oxus; men call the capital city the little Râjagriha—so many are the sacred traces therein. I beg, sir, you will spend some time in paying reverence there (to these sacred spets), and afterwards take up your carriage and go southward"

At this time there were in this place many tens of prosts of Bultra, who had come to express sympaths with the new Sheh on the death of his pridece sor, when the Master of the Law met them, he expressed his intention, and to this they replied You ought to go with us at once—the road is own now, but if you delay here longer the change of place will be difficult Master of the Law on the e words forthwith took leave of the Sheh, and taking up his carriage, departed with those priests. Having arrivel at this place (se Bullh). ob erving the city and its suburbs, he notice! tho apparently barren character of the city and its neighlourhood, but yet, in truth, it was most excellent land

There were about a hundred Sangharamas and three thousand priests, or so, all belonging to the " Little Vehicle' 2

Outside the city on the south-west quarter there is the Navasafighārāma, which is remarkable for its imposing structure and unusual ornaments Inside the Safighirima, in the hall of Buddha, there is the water bot of Buddha, able to contain about two pecks There is also here a tooth of Buddha, about one mich long, and eight or mno-tenths in breadth, of n vellow-white colour, this relic always irradiates a bright miraculous light.

There is also here the sweeping brush of Buddha, made of Kasa grass, it is about three feet long, and perhaps seven inches round, the handle is ornamented with various precious substances These three things nro brought out every feast day, and the priests and laymen draw near to worship them The most faithful, behold a spiritual radiancy proceeding from them

Wi om ti o Sheh hall cause I to be poisoned
 Ti is seems to show that Bud lhism I ad revel ed Balkh at an early date

To the north of the Sangharama there is a Stupa about 200 feet high. To the south-west of the Sangharama there is a Vihâra, of an old date. All the priests who have attained to the four degrees of holiness (the fruition of the four paths) during successive ages, dwelling here, after their Nirvana, have had erected to their memory towers, the foundations of which, to the number of several hundreds, are close together in this vicinity. Fifty li to the north-west of the capital (the great city), we come to the town of Ti-wei; forty li to the north of this town there is the town of Po-li. There are two Stûpas in this town, three chang in height: in former days when Buddha first arrived at Supreme Enlightenment he accepted some honey and meal at the hands of two merchants, who were in that place; when they had heard from him the fine moral precepts and the ten rules (sikshapadas), they asked to be allowed to present their religious offerings. Tathagata gave to them, for the purpose, some pieces of his nails and portions of his hair, and ordered them to construct a tower, and furnished them with The two merchantmen, taking (the relics), a model. returned to their own country (or, when about to return to their own country), and built these two sacred (spiritual) towers.2 About seventy li to the west of the city there is a Stûpa more than two chang high; they were built in the days of Kâśyapa Buddha long ago.

In the New Sangharama there was (a priest) of the kingdom of Tcheka who had studied the three Piṭakas belonging to the Little Vehicle; his name was Prajñâkara. Hearing that there were many sacred traces of religion in the country of Fo-ho-lo (Baktra), he had therefore come to worship and reverence them. This man was of singular wisdom and learning, so that as a youth he was

n. 159.

Whatever the historical truth of this record may be, it points at any rate to the belief that even in the days of Buddha, merchants from Baktria had regular commerce with India,

¹ The Chinese is Chang-ché, which corresponds to the Sc. Shréshtin and the Pali Setthi.—Vide Records, i. 47, distinguished by his preating only. He had discoughly sounded the nine collection, and institute the four Agamas. The fire of his expendion of the principles of the faith had spread through at India. He was prefectly acquiring with the Abbusharian of the Lute Vehicle, the Korles of Kâyayana, the Shatpalabhida aina and old riwels.

Hearing that the Master of the Law had come from a distance to search for religious books, he was exceedingly glad to mee him. The Master of the Law, in the course of his statement respecting his doubts and difficulties about the Kosha and Vithasha and other books, asked him for to be explanations, and was answered in each even with extreme clearness. He remained here a month and smalled the Viblisha Sastra. In this Sang-harman, moreover, there were two other (pricate) versed in the Tripitaka according to the Little Vehicle, their names were Tamoopuch (Dharmapriva) and Tamockirl (Dharmalara); they were exceedingly honoured by the others. Seeing the sacral features of the Master of the Law and the marks of intelligence which distinguished lim, they goal him marked respect.

There were at this time to the south-west of Biktri the countries ironed Jui-mo-to (Jumadha) and Hirshilen (Juzyfan). Their kings, hearing that the Master of the Law laid come from a distant country, both sent their chief ministers to salute him, and to request him to pass through their countries and receive religious offerings; but he declined to go. The messagers having returned and again come buck several times, in consequence of his continual refusals, at last he complied with the request. The kings, being overjoyed, offered him gold and precious stones, and abundance of drink and food; the Master of the Law declined all such gifts, and returned

¹ That is the nine Africa or directions of the Sacred Bocks of Buddham Private unout, Introduction, p. 53, sa.
² For these places, rule I courts, do., vol. 1, p. 48.

Going south from Balkh in company with Prajūākara, the Master of the Law, they entered the kingdom of Kie-chi (Gaz).

To the south-east of this kingdom they entered the great Snowy Mountains, and going 600 li and more they left the boundaries of the Tu-ho-lo (Tukhára) country, and entered the kingdom of Fan-yen-na (Bómiyán). This country from east to west is about 2000 li in It is situated in the middle of the Snowy Mountains; the muddy roads and dangers of the passes and tracks are double those of the frozen desert. pelting hail and snowstorms go on perpetually intermingled; then, the winding and crooked passes that are met with; then, in the level parts, the mid stretching for several changs; so that what Sung-yn says about the dangers of the western region, (viz., of Sz'chuen and the Wu-shan),1 "the storeyed ice-like mountains, and the flying snow for a thousand li," is applicable to this district also.

Alas! if it were not that I had determined to seek the incomparable Law for the sake of all that lives, much rather would I have pleaded that this body of mine, left by my parents, should have gone on its (last) journey (i.e. that I should have died). And so Wangtsun,² when he had accomplished the embankments of Kin-che, himself said: "I am but a loyal servant of Han." The Master of the Law having surmounted the precipices of the Snowy Mountains in search for the sacred Law, is also able to be named "a true son of Tathagata."

It was thus he gradually arrived at Bâmiyân, the chief town of which possesses something like ten religious foundations, with several thousand priests; these belong to the Little Vehicle, according to the Lôkôttara Vâdinah school.

¹ Vide Mayers, Manual, &c., sub. 873.

² Probably the character Tsun is for To. Mayers, 822.

The king of Birmyan went forth to excert him, and insided him within his palace to receive his religious offerings; after a day or two he went forth to make his observations.

There were there two prests belonging to the Multivanglula relief, where many were Arysolve and Arysolve, both of them deeply versel in the Law. When they not the Mister of the Law there were full of admirst on, that so rem to a country as Craix should persons such a distinguished price. They conducted him from place to place to pay his reverence, or to inspect, and did not cover in their attention and a vise's to him.

North-cast of the capital, on the declivity of a hill, there is a studing stone figure below 150 feet high To the cast of the figure there is a Sanghtrimi, to the east of which is a studing figure of Sikyi, made of calamine stone, in height one hundred feet. Within the Sanghtrimia there is a figure of Buddha represented as when he was asleep on energy Nirians, about 1000 feet in length. All these figures are of an imposing character and extremely good (execution)

Going southerest from this, 200 h or so, crossing the grat Snowy Mountains, we come to a small valley a whose there is a Singharama, in which there is a tooth of Buddh, and also a tooth of a Pratyck's Buddhy, who livel at the beginning of the present Kulpa. This tooth is five inches long, and four inches broad, or a little less. Moreover, there is the tooth of a Chikravarttin mourach (lang of the golden wheel), throe mehes long, and two inches broad. Moreover, there is the iron pot (patra), which Shang-no-kia-fo-sha (Sánakardsa) carried, able to hold eight or nine pints, and also his Sanghiti robe, of a bright red colour. This man, during five hundred births

² Hot the text does not say "of Bu biles, as Julien translates Fie, and the property of the property of the property of the sense of a valley or gorge

in the world, had always been born with this robe on him, but afterwards (when he was ordained) changed it (or, it changed) into a Kashaya garment; the story is a long one, as may be read in the other narrative 1 (i.e. the Si-yu-ki).

Thus passed fifteen days, and then, leaving Bâmiyân, on the second day he encountered a snowstorm, which caused him to miss his road. Coming to a small sand hillock, he met some hunters, who showed him the way. Crossing the Black Ridge,² he arrived at the borders of Kapiśa.

This kingdom is about 4000 li in circuit. On the north it is bounded (backed) by the Snowy Mountains. The king is selected from the Kshattriya caste. He is a clever, shrewd man, and has brought under his control some ten kingdoms.

When (Hinen-Tsiang) was about to arrive at the capital, the king and all the priests went forth from the city to escort him.

There are some hundred or so religious foundations, the residents in which had sharp words together, each convent wishing to induce the Master to stop there.

There was a temple belonging to the Little Vehicle, which was named Sha-lo-kia. The story goes that the temple was built some time ago, when the son of the Han Emperor was held as an hostage. The priests of this temple said: "Our temple was originally founded by a son of the Han Emperor, and now, as you come from that country, you ought first to stop with us."

The Master of the Law seeing them thus, was deeply impressed; and as his companion, Hwni-Sing (i.e. Praj-nākara, see p. 50), Master of the Law, belonged to this school of the Little Vehicle, to which these priests were attached, he did not desire to live in a temple belonging to the Great Vehicle; accordingly they went to stop at the temple made for the hostage.

Vide Records, vol. i., p. 53.
 (Siáh Köh), or Köh Baba.

³ For some remarks on this name, vide Records, i. p. 57, n. 203.

Mercover, at this time there was treasured here (b) the I stray), under the first of the image of the Grat-Spirit King, conthe countless define and percent and general means for the after regimes of the bubbles. The proofs, in gratitude for such favours, had in various the pointed on the walls the figure of the hosting times. At the time of the necles on of the Rost (is the Rost divery the Ring), thus congregation holds an assembly for preaching and recting the Scriptures, as a means for planting (or, perfect along his) religious ment, 2 this contorn has been handed down from generation to generation, and is rtill observed.

Becoming there was a writed ling who, find by a coretous disposition, desired to carry off the practiferature. Accordingly he sent men to dig underneath the foot of the Sprit-King. Then the cauth greatly qualled, and the faure of the parrot which was on the top of his head, seeing them diguing flapped his wings, and recentivel violently. The ling and his troops were all seir 1 with terror and fell to the earth, after this, they returned house.

There is in the temple a Supp. The tee (energling rings) of this building having tumbled down, the prests wished to the the treasure and to repair it. On making the attempt, the earth again trembled and roared, so that no one direct to go near

When the Master of the Law arrived, the whole assembly come together, and, as n body, requested the Master of the Law (to asset them), setting forth and relating the previous circumstances

The Master of the Law and the others then proceeded to the place of the Spirit (that is, the place of the statue

[?] It stis, l'ailourana rele Pro rde b i , n 207 2 Julien's transistion is too diffuse There is no mention of "the l'outage" in the tast, and the symbol fak relates to "religious merit." It would seem however, that the religious service was designed to perpetuate the memory of the hostage of the Spirit-King), and burning incense, he said: "The royal hostage formerly concealed here these precious things, purposing them for the meritorions object of building (i.e. repairing the building); now then the time has arrived for opening the treasure (charity) and using it. We pray you to penetrate the truth of our purpose, and for a while restrain the power (virtue) of your august presence, and permit this proceeding.

"I, Hinen-Tsiang, will personally superintend (the work of excavation), and will measure accurately the weight, and dispense to the master of the Work, justly, what is necessary for the execution of the repairs, and will permit no useless waste. Only we beseech the spiritual power of the god to condescend to search out the truth (of our intentions)."

Having said these words, he ordered the men to dig into the ground; they did so calmly and without molestation. At the depth of seven or eight feet, they came to a great copper vessel, which contained several hundred catties of gold, and several scores of pearls. The great congregation were filled with joy, and without exception paid their services to the Master of the Law. The Master of the Law kept the Rain-Rest in this temple.

The king of this country thinks little of the polite arts, he entirely trusts to (the teaching of) the Great Vehiele. As he was fond of the sight of religious conferences and discussions, he asked the Master of the Law and Prajñâkara (Doctor) of the three Piṭakas, to a religious assembly to be held in a Temple of the Great Vehiele. In that Temple there was (a Doctor) of the three Piṭakas called Manôjñaghosha (Mo-nu-jo-kiu-sha), and also a Sa-po-to, A-li-ye-fa-mo (i.e. Aryavarma of the Sarvāstivādin school), and also a priest of the Mi-sha-seh school (Mahîsāsaka), named Ku-na-po-to (Gunabhadra); these priests were reputed the chief in that convent. Their acquirements, however, were not universal, but confined to one or other points in the Great or Latte (1717) as the care might be, and although elear on that point yet narrowed in its extent (lensel) But the Motor of the Law by the roughly exprinted the tender of all the electe, and answered the question just to him by all comes, according to the grant the at the a sente bit at days braces constrained to acknowled a line user lets

Thus In five dive the discussor a read of then the are alls di percel

The king being overrared awe to the Master of the Law, as a district fire eat, five p eces of embroplered silk, and to the offers, different off range

The Ram-Retreat being cided in the Shado-kin convent, Principally returned (to Bill b) in abeliance to the request of the ling of Tukhler. The Master of the Law I wing reported from him proceeded eistword and having advanced some 600 h, passing the Blick Rule. he entered the bord re of India, and came to the country of lan ro (Lamphan)

This country is about 1000 h in circuit. There are ten Sangharimas, the priests are all devoted to the Great Vehicle Having stopped three days, he proceeded southward, and came to a littl full on which was a Sting. This is where Buddha stonged in former days when he came here from the south, in consequence of which, men, in after days, built this Stope from a feeling of affection ite respect. All places to the north of this are called Mi-li kn (i.e frontier lands) [Melcha lands] Tathanta, when he desired to instruct and convert (these people), in so doing, used to pass through the air in coming and going, and would not trend on the earth, as the earth trembled and shook under his footsteps

From this, going south twenty h or so, and descending the mountain ridge, after crossing a river, he came to the country of Na-kie lo-ho (Nagarahara) Two h to the south-east of the capital of the country is a Stûpa 300 feet or so in height; it was built by Aśôka râja. It was here Śâkya Bôdhisattva, in the second Asañkhya of years (from the present time), met Jen-tang-Fo (Dipankara Buddha). He spread his deer-skin robe and unloosed his hair, to preserve (the Buddha) from the mud, and in consequence received a predictive assurance (that he would become a Buddha). Although there have passed Kalpa destructions (since that period), the traces of this event remain intact. The Dêvas here scatter all sorts of flowers and continually pay their religious services.

But there is nothing said about "He black ridge, as Julien translates

The Master of the Law when he arrived at this spot, paid his devotions and religiously circumambulated the building.

There was then, by the side of the Stûpa, an old priest who explained for the Master's sake the origin of the building.

The Master's question was this: "The period of the Bôdhisattva's service in spreading his hair was in the second Asankhya of years, but since this period to the present time an innumerable number of Kalpas have elapsed. In the course of these Kalpas the universe has been repeatedly perfected and destroyed. As when the destruction by fire has taken place, even Mount Sumeru has been reduced to ashes, how is it that this religious monument (or, these sacred traces), cannot be destroyed?"

In reply, he said: "At the time of the dissolution of the universe this monument also is destroyed; but at the period of restoration, this old vestige is also restored to its original condition. So, just as Mount Sumeru is restored, after its destruction, to its former condition, why should this sacred relic alone not reappear? This comparison can admit of no question." Such was the celebrated reply.

About ten li to the south-west is a Stûpa; this is the place where Buddha (i.e. when he was Dipankara) bought the flowers.¹

¹ For the story of Dipankara purchasing the flowers, vide Records, i. 92, 93.

Agun, to the south-east, after crossing a sindy peak, we come to the town of Buddlin's skull lone! In this town is a double-storejod tower and in the upper store) is a sinull Saipa, unde of the seven precious substances, which continus the bono of the top of the head of Tathagata. This bone is one foot and two inches round. The marks of the hair orifice, are quite distinct. The colour of the bone is a jellowish white, it is enclosed in a jewelled box. If any one wishes to know the indications of his guilt or his religious merit, he mixes some powdered incense into a paste, which he spreads upon a piece of silken stuff, and then presses it on the top of the bone according to the resulting indications the good fortune or ill fortune of the man, is determined.

The Master of the Law, in taking an impression, obtained the figure of the Bödhi tree of the two Sammatras who also took impressions, the first obtained, a figure of Buddha, the other a figure of a lotus. The Brahman who guarded the bone was everyoged as he turned to the Master, with his fingers interlaced (rounded like a ball), and then scattering flowers before him said. "That indication which the Master has obtained is extremely rare, and is a sure sign of your having a portion of true wisdom (Bödhi)."

There is also here a tower of the skull bone shaped

Also the eyeball of Buddha, as large as aa Âmra fruit, and so bright that its rays dart forth from the box to some distance outside.

Again, there is the Saughati robe of Buddha, made of a very fine silky eotton stuff

Again, there is the staff of Baddha, the rings whereof are made of tin, and the haft of sandalwood. All these the Master of the Law adored with reverence, after which, in consequence of this opportunity of paying his heartfelt respect, he presented (at the different shrines), fifty gold pieces, one thousand silver pieces, four silken banners, two pieces of brocaded (satin), and two sets of religious vestments: then having scattered flowers, and again prostrated himself in worship, he went forth.

And now he heard that to the south-west of the city of Dipankara, about twenty li or so, there was the cave where dwelt the Nâgarâja Gopâla. Tathâgata in former days having tamed this Nâga, left to him as a bequest his shadow to remain in the cavern. The Master of the Law wished to go there to worship; but he was told that the roads were deserted and dangerous, and moreover that they were frequented by robbers, and that for the last two or three years those who had gone for the purpose of seeing (the shadow) had not succeeded in their purpose, and so there were few now who went.

And now, when the Master wished to go to pay his adoration to this relic, the envoys sent with him by the king of Kapiśa, earnestly longing to return, besought him not to delay any longer nor think of going to the cave.

The Master of the Law replied: "The shadow of the true body of Tathâgata, during a hundred thousand kalpas can with difficulty be met with: how much rather, then, having come so far as this, should I not go to worship it? As for you, advance on your journey slowly, and I will rejoin you after a little while."

On this he went alone, and arriving at the town of Dipankara, he entered a monastery, and inquired some particulars as to the road, but found no one who would go with him as a guide. After a while he met with a little boy who said: "The farm-house of the convent is not far from the place, I will guide you so far." The Master then went with the boy and arrived at the farm-house, where he passed the night. He then found an old man who knew the place, and so with him as a guide they set out together. After going a few li they were met by five robbers who came upon them sword in land. The Master of the Law immediately removed his large draft, to as to let the religious vestments appear. The robbers rand: "Where is the Master going?" In right be rail, "I are wastful to werehip the abulow of Poliba." The robbers rail: "Have you not learl that this roal is infected with the goods?" He answered "Bolbers are him on beings. I am now going to adone Bulders; though the robbers defined with rayage beauts, I have no fear; flow much be should I fear you, who are my human benefacters (or poster ra)!"

The rol bers were touched to the heart by these words and allowed him to go to is from his act of words and so they arrived at the case

The cave has to the eastward of a stone water-cour e. the door through the wall (of the care) faces the wish, Looking into the case all is wrapped in gloom and no object visible. The old man spoke to the Master thus. "You must enter and pass strught on to the eastern will; when you touch that, stop, and then go backwards fifty pages and no more, then free the castern wall and lock; the shade v is in that place" The Master of the Law entered (the care) and paced forward, it may be fifty strides,1 and touched the eastern wall, and then according to the directions he went backwards and stood still. Then animated by the most sincere desire, he paid his worship with a hundred and more prestrations; but he saw nothing. He reproached himself for his shortcomings, and with luncintable cries, he expressed his deep sorrow. Then again with his utmost heart he and his worship and recited the Shing-kwan and other sutras, he also repeated the gathes of the Buddhas, making one prostration after each verse of Praise After about one hundred prostrations, he saw on the eastern wall a great light about the size of a Patra? (in circuit), which disappeared in a moment. Sorrowful and yet rejoicing he again paid his adorations, and then there appeared a great light round as a basin, which again as quickly disappeared. Then, filled with additional ardour and desire, he vowed within himself that if he did not see the shadow of the Lord of the world, that he would never leave the place. Then he performed two hundred more acts of worship, and then, whilst the whole cave was brightened up with light, the shadow of Tathagata of a shining white colour appeared on the wall, as when the opening clouds suddenly reveal the golden Mount and its excellent indications. Bright were the divine lineaments of his face, and as the Master gazed in awe and holy reverence, he knew not how to compare the spectacle; the body of Buddha and his kashaya robe were of a yellowish red colour, and from his knees upward the distinguishing marks of his person were exceedingly glorious; but below, the lotus throne on which he sat was slightly obscured. On the left and right of the shadow and somewhat behind, were visible the shadows of Bôdhisattvas and the holy priests surrounding them.

¹ According to this if I e come back fifty taces he must have stood at the entrance of the cave 2 Alma dish, or bowl

Having gazed on the vision, he summoned six men, from some distance outside the gate, to get some fire, and bring it in for burning incense. But as soon as the fire was brought in, the shadow of Buddha disappeared. Then he quickly ordered them to put the fire out, and, on his earnest request, the shadow again appeared.

Among the six men, five of the number were able to see the shadow, but one of them could see nothing.

Thus the appearance lasted for the short space of half a mealtime, during which having uttered his praises in worship and scattered flowers and incense, the light then suddenly disappeared.¹

Having left the cave, the Brahman, who had been his guide, was filled with joy as he extolled the miracle; moreover he said: "If it had not been for the sincere.

¹ The entire story of the "Shadow" such contrivances already been introseems to indicate the use of a Intern and slide as a pious fraud. Had

A hundred paces or so to the south-west of the great Stûpa there is a figure, earved out of white stone, eighteen feet high; it stands with its face to the north. Very many spiritual portents (are exhibited here). Frequently there are persons who see the statue at night going round the great Stûpa.

A hundred li or so to the north-east of the Sangharama of Kanishka, we cross a great river and come to the town of Po-sih-kic-lo-fa-ti (Pushkalavati). To the east of the town there is a Stûpa built by Asôka-raja. Here the four past Buddhas have preached the Law.

Four or five li to the north of the town is a Sangharama, within which is a Stûpa, about 200 feet high, erected by Asôka raja; it was here that Sakya Buddha when formerly living (acting) as a Bôdhisattva, delighted in performing deeds of charity. For a thousand births he was born as king of this country, and here, during these births, he plucked out his eyes (and gave them in charity). Of all these acts there are innumerable holy traces.

The Master of the Law visited these sacred spots in succession, and offered worship.

When he came to a great Tower, or to a great Sanghârâma, he always gave away a portion of the gold and silver and silks and religious vestments which he had received as a charitable donation from the king of Kau-Chang. Having delayed long enough to show the sincerity of his faith in making these offerings, he departed.

From this place he arrived at the town of U-to-kiahan-cha (Utakhanda).

Travelling northwards from this town and passing over mountains and valleys, after going 600 li or so, he entered the country of U-chang-na (Udyâna).

On either side of the river Su-po-sa-tu (Subhavâstu)

On either side of the river Su-po-sa-tu (Subhavâstu) there were formerly 1400 Sanghârâmas, with some 18,000 priests; but now all is desert and depopulated.¹

¹ In Sung-yun's time (A.D. 520) the country was in a high state of prosperity. It was probably devastated by Mihirakula,

The priests who observe the Rules and follow the traditions of religion, belong to five schools, viz. the Dharmaguptas, the Mahikisakas, the Kūšyapiyas, the Sarvastivadas, and the Mahis mghikas

The king mostly lives in the town of Mung-lie-li (Mungale), which is well populated and prosperous the cast of the town four or his his a great stup. eelebrated for its miraculous capabilities. This is the place where formerly Buddha (was born) as Kshanti Rish, and for the sake of Kalinia allowed his body to be cut in pieces?

To the north-cast of the town 250 li, entering on a great mountain region, we come to the fountain of the Nan A-po-lo-lo (Apalala), which in fact is the upper cource of the river Suvistu. It flows to the south-west

This land is very cold. Even during spring and summer there are frequent frosts, morning and ovening, and living snow-storms, with pelting run and snow fanerfully commingled, reflecting the five colours like confused flowers

Thirty li or so south-west of the Naga fountain on the north side of the river on the top of a large flat stone, there is a trace of Buddha's foot. This trace annears long or short, according to the ment or prayers of the men who inspect it

In former days when Buddha subdued the naga Apalala, he came to this spot and left this trace as a fortunate indication

Tollowing down the stream thirty h or so, we come to the washing-garment stone of Tathagata (ie the stone on which he washed his robe) The marks of the flowery tracery of the Kashaya garment are plantly seen

To the south of the town 400 h or so, we come to Mount Hi-lo Here Tathagata in former days, hearing a half-gatha, in gratitude to the Yaksha, threw his body down (from a tree) for his use. A gâtha consists of forty-two words. Ch. Ed. The Si-yu-ki says thirty-two.]

¹ Probably the same as Mankalas Lat 34°50' N, Long 72°50 E, marked on the Indian Survey Map No 4

2 Julien's translation is here in error, 226, p 86

Fifty li to the west of the town of Mungali, after crossing a great river,2 we came to a stûpa called Lu-hita-ka (Rôhitaka, i.e., red); it is about ten chang high (100 feet), and was built by Asôka-râja. Here Tathâgata in former days being born as Maitribala râja, cut his body with a knife in charity to five Yakshas.

To the north-east of the city thirty li or so, we come to a stone stûpa called "The Miraculous" (Adbhûta). It is about thirty feet high. It was here that Buddha in olden days preached the law on behalf of Devas and After leaving the spot, this stupa rose out of the earth of its own accord.

To the west of the stûpa, after crossing a great river and going three or four li, we come to a Vihâra, in which is a figure of Avalôkiteśvara Bodhisattva, which is possessed of exceedingly august spiritual qualities.

To the north-east of the city, it is said that there are men, who, passing across mountains and valleys, following up (the river) in a contrary direction, along many mountain roads full of mud and dangerous defiles-sometimes passing across by iron chains and sometimes over flying bridges—going thus a thousand li or so,—come to the valley of Ta-li-lo (Daril) identical with the site of the old capital of U-chang-na (Udyana).3

In this valley (ch'uen) is a large Sangharama, by the side of which is a carved wooden statue of Maitreya Bôdhisattva, of a golden colour and very majestic in appearance. It is about 100 feet in height, and was made by the Arhat Madhyantika. By his power of divine locomotion he enabled an artist to ascend to the Tusita heaven, and caused him to observe personally the characteristic marks

¹ Records. Vol. i. p. 124.
2 Viz. the Kumar River.
3 In this passage the introduction of the phrase "there are men, &e." is probably an error. The symbol for "a thousand," is also imperfect.

(of Matrix viril do). After roughters three times, the previously was tubbed

Going south from the town of U-to I in-1 in c'a we cross the Sin to river, which is here three or four Ii in width. Its stream is extremely clear and rapid Posonous dry, one and exil syries dwell beneath this river in great numbers. Those who cross this river carrying with them rive genus of India or exhibited flosers, or Sairies the bost (in schieb they embark) is sudjently overwhelmed by the waves.

Crowing the river we come to the country of Ta ch'a-shi-h (Tal shifth). To the north of this town, about twelve or thirteen Is, there is a stope which was built by King Af'ka. It constantly cinits a sacred light from its aurlance.

In o'den times when Tathugata was practising the duties of a Bodhisattia, he cut off his head in this place. He was then king of a great country, and his name was Chandraprabha. By so doing he aimed to acquire the supreme wisdom of Bodhi, and this he did through a thousand births.

By the side of the stupe is a Saugharana, in old days Ku-mo-lo to (Kumaralakila) a master of the Sautrantika school, composed in this place various sastras

From this, going about 700 h in a south-easterly direction, we pass through the Lingdom of Sang-ho-polo (Suthapura)

After leaving the northern borders of Takshasila, and crossing the Sindhu river about 200 h to the southeast, we go through a great rocky pass (gate). This is the spot where in olden time the Mahasattva as a Prince Royal, give up his body to feed the seven enbs of the starving Wu-tu (tiger cat, cf. Otu).

The hand here was originally dyed with the blood of the Royal Prince, and now it remains of the same colour; and the shrubs and trees partake of this hue.

Again going from this in a sonth-easterly direction 500 li or so across the mountains, we come to the country of Wu-la-shi (Uraśa). Still going to the southeast, climbing precipitous passes and crossing iron bridges for 1000 li or so, we arrive at the country of Kaśmîr.

The capital of this country on the west borders on the Great River. There are 100 religious foundations in it, and about 5000 priests. Moreover, there are four stûpas of wonderful height and great magnificence: these were built by Aśôka-rûja. Each of them has about one measure of the śarîras of Tathâgata.

When the Master of the Law first arrived at the borders (of this kingdom), he entered it by the stone gates, the western entrance of the kingdom. The king sent his mother and younger brother with chariots and horses to escort him. Having entered the stone gates, he visited successively the Sanghârâmas and offered his adorations; then coming to a temple he passed the night there. The name of the temple was U-sse-kia-lo (Hushkara).

That night the priests saw a vision in their sleep; a divine being said to them: "This stranger-priest is come from Mahâ-China; he wishes to study the sacred books, and to adore the sacred traces in India."

The Masters said in humble reply: "We have not yet heard of this man."

"This man who has come (from afar) to seek after the Law," he added, "is surrounded by numberless good spirits, who follow him everywhere. Such a man is now in your midst—resting for the night. The merit which attaches to attention paid to distant visitors is very great. You ought now therefore to be diligently reciting the Scriptures, and exciting in him a spirit of praise. Why, then, are ye idle in these duties and plunged in sleep?"

¹ So restored by Julien, in loc.

affectionate. Thus he was pleased to invite the illustrious stranger and to honour him as a guest. The Master of the Law likewise with all his heart respectfully questioned him, and night and day begged him ceaselessly to explain and give into his keeping the various Sâstras.

That eminent man was about seventy years of age—his natural forces were somewhat abated—but having had the fortune to meet with a vessel of divine power (i.e. Hiven-Tsiang) he used his utmost efforts to rouse himself (to the task of explication). Before noon he explained the Kosha śâstra. After noon he explained the Niyâya-anusârâ śâstra—after the first watch of the night he explained the Hêtuvidyâ śâstra. On these occasions all the learned men within the borders (of the kingdom), without exception, flocked together (to hear the discourse). The Master of the Law, following the words of his teacher, grasped thoroughly the entire subject—he penetrated all the obscure passages and their sacred mysteries, completely.

So that eminent man was immeasurably overjoyed and spake to the body of priests in these words, "This priest of China possesses wonderful (vast and immeasurable) strength of wisdom. In all this congregation there is none to surpass him. By his wisdom and his virtue he is competent to join in succession to the fame of the brother of Vasubandhu (i.e. Asangha Bodhisattva). What a subject for regret, indeed! that belonging to a distant land he cannot at once form a part in the bequeathed fragrance of the saints and sages!"

Then there was in the congregation certain priests versed in the doctrine of the Great Vehicle—viz., Pi-shu-to-sang-ho (Visuddhasimha), Chin-na-fan-tu (Jinabandhu); and of the Sarvâstavâdin school, the following: Su-kia-mi-to-lo (Sugatamitra), Po-su-mi-to-lo (Vasumitra); and of the school of the Mahâsañghikas, the following: Su-li-ye-ti-po (Sûryadeva), Chin-na-ta-lo-to (Jinatrâta).

Next in ten myriad stanzas they composed the Vinaya-vibâshâ-sâstra, to explain the Vinaya.

Next they composed, in ten myriad verses, the Abhi-dhama-Vibâshâ-sâstra.

Altogether they composed thirty myriad of verses consisting of ninety-six myriad words.

The king ordered these Sastras to be engraved on sheets of copper, which he enclosed in a stone cliest, sealed and inscribed. Then he built a great stupa and placed the chest within it, commanding the Yaksha spirits to protect and defend it.

The increased light thrown on the very mysterious doctrines of religion, is the result (force) of this (conduct).

Thus having halted here, first and last, for two years, and having studied the Sûtras and Śâstras, and paid reverence to the sacred traces, the Master took his leave.

Proceeding in a south-westerly direction, he crossed mountains and streams, and going 700 li, he came to the kingdom of Pun-nu-tso (Punach).

Thence going east 400 li or so, he came to Ho-lo-shepu-lo (Rajapuri).

From this, going south-east down the mountains and crossing the river, after 700 li or so, he came to the kingdom of Tseh-kia (Takka).

From Lan-po (Lamghan) till arriving in this territory, the common people (being residents in a frontier country of a wild character), differ to some degree in their manners, clothing, and language, from India, having the customs of outlying and scattered districts.

Going from the country of Râjapuri, after two days they crossed the Chandrabhâga ² river, and came to the town of Che-ye-pu-lo (Jayapura), where they lodged for the night in a temple belonging to the heretics. This temple was outside the western gave of the town, and at this time cents red about twenty discipled. The divaler the forms, they resided the town of Cleikisho (Stato). In this town is a Saughátár a with about a leit died priets. In the old days Vasulain thu Boshifattya here composed the treatise Shi partializar? By the ride of the convent is a ridgo, about 200 feet high. This is the spit where in ferrici times the four Building fixeded the law. They begin tilled traces of their footsteps as they walked to and fro which are still visible.

¹ Julien has, by mistake, 200 li.

² The Chenab.

Leving this place he arrived at a great forest of Pollocke tries (Palatis), just to the cretward of the town of Na-lo-sing-ho (Notasamha). In the fore the town of Na-lo-sing-ho (Notasamha). In the fore the concountered a leand of fifty robber. These men, having taken the clothes and poods of the Master of the Law and his companions, without having anything then pursued them, sword in hand, till they reached a dried-up mursh, ready to slay thin all. This marsh was covered with a tangled mass of prickly, united creepers. The Master of the Law and the Sramaneris who accompanied him, locking eagerly through the mirrices of the wood, erw on the routhern side of the mursh a water-course wide and deep enough to contain several men. Having privately told the Master of this, he and they together passed through it, and coming out on the south-est sude, they ran as quickly as they could for two or three hi, when they met a Brahman at work ploughing the land.

When they told this man about the robbers he was very much frightened, and unracdiately mijeked his oxen, and went with the Master to the village. Here he assembled the people by blowing the centel and beating of druins. When he had got about eighty men, each taking what weipen he could, they went in haste te the place where the rebbers were. The rebbers seeing the crowd of men, quickly dispersed and entered the forest.

¹ The original is ambiguous: It may refer to the number of the company with whom Buen Triang travelled ² Cf No. 1193, Nanj B's Cat

The Master of the Law forthwith went towards the marsh and liberated the men who were bound; and all the people charitably divided their garments among them and conducted them to the village to pass the night.

And now whilst the men were weeping and lamenting, the Master of the Law alone was smiling merrily (without sorrow). On this his companions asked him, and said: "The robbers have thoroughly despoiled us of our travelling robes and goods; and we have only just escaped with our lives. Being beggared thus, our difficulties and dangers are at their extremest point. When we reflect and think of the circumstances that occurred in the forest, we cannot but experience the greatest sorrow. How is it that the Master alone does not share in our sorrow, but is able to keep a smile on his face?"

Answering, he said: "The greatest gift which living creatures possess, is life. If life is safe, what need we care about the rest? So in the current books of my country it is said: "The great treasure of heaven and earth is life; "whilst life lasts, so long let the great treasure be prized!" A few garments and a few goods, why care for these so much?"

From these remarks his companions understood fully that as the turbulent waves of a river do not disturb its pure water beneath, so was he.

On the morrow he arrived at the eastern frontiers of the kingdom of Tcheka (Takka) and entered a great city.²

On the west of the city on the north side of the road, there is a great forest of An-lo (Âmra) trees; in this forest dwelt a Brâhman of 700 years (sic), who in appearance was but about thirty years old. His form and complexion were perfect (of the first class). His understanding was of a divine character: his reasoning powers, superabundant. He had thoroughly investigated the chang and red Batras (the Privages to and the Satafistea), he was emirent in the stuly of the Velia, and other books He had two fellowers each of whem was aged 100 terrs or more. When he lad an intersiew with the Master of the Law be was overrored in afferding him hospitality. at d wice he i card of the adventure with the reblere le rent one of his remants to tell the prople of the town, who were Reddiests, to prepare ford for the Master of the law. In this town there were several thousand dwellings; a few of the people were led evers in Buildha, but reest of them were heret as fractificial hereites)

¹ Cf. St. Matth. vi. 25. ² Probably Lahore.

⁸ Probably for 170.

Whilst in the country of Kalmir, the renown of the Master of the Law hal been noised abroad and the neighbouring countries all knew of it the messenger, therefore, from the Bishmon, come to the neighbourning city, and announced as follows "The priest from China has come to our neighbourhood, and robbers have spoiled hum of his clothes and effects now then let all who hear me understand that this is an opportunity for adding to the amount of their religious ment."

In consequence of this address of the messenger, all hostile religious feeling was laid aside, and some 300 persons of distruction, having heard the circumstances, came together and brought a length of cotton stuff and provisions for esting and drinking, which they respectfully presented to hun, placing them before hun with extreme humility and reverence,

The Master of the Law, after repeating certain forms of prayer (incantations), further proceeded to declare the dectrine of rewards and pumshments, as a consequeneo of present conduct. In consequence of this the men armyed at a knewledge of truth and give up their erreneons doctrine and returned to right reason. Thus with ievous words and light heart they held their intercourse with the Master and returned.

The aged (Brahman) was overjoyed at this wonderful event. Meanwhile the Master divided the cotton stuff among the different persons of the company, each person receiving several pieces for making garments, and when there was still some left, he presented five pieces (to the Brahman) in addition.

Here he remained for one month studying the Sútres, the Prh-lun (Śata-śāstra), the Kwing-p-h-lun (Śata-śāstra vāipulyam). The author of this work (i.e. Diva Bôdhisattra) was a disciple of Nazārjuna, who himself having received the doctrines of his master, expounded them with clearness.

From this place going 500 li to the east, he arrived at the kingdom of Chi-na-po-tai (Chinapati), and took up his quarters in the convent called Tu-che-ca-na (!). Here there was a renowned priest named Pi-ni-to-poh-la-pó (Vinitaprabha). He was of a good reputation and had mastered the three pitakas. He had himself composed a commentary on the Pañchaskhanda Śāstra, and on the Vidyāmātrasiddhi-Trīdasasātra.

On this account the Master remained there fourteen months. He studied the Abhidharma Śāstra, the Abhidharma-prakarana-sāsana-Śāstra, the Nyāyadvāra-tāraka Śāstra, and others.

To the south-east of the capital, after going 50 li or so, we arrive at the Tâmasavana Sañghârâma; in this convent there are some 300 priests, who belong to the Sarvâstivâdina school.

The thousand Buddhas of the Bhadra Kalpa, are to assemble in this place with both men and Devas, to preach the law to them.

In the 300th year after the Nirvâna of Śâkya Tathâgata, there lived a master of Śâstras called Kâtyâyana who composed in this place the Jnâna-prasthâna Śâstra.

From this, going north-east 140 or 150 li, we come to the kingdom of Jâlandhara. On entering this country the pilgrim went to the Nagaradhana convent, where there was an enument priest called Chandravarina, who was thoroughly acquainted with the Tripital's

¹ Vide Records, i. 170.

On the account he rested here four months, studying the Peal transactal ar bishd-Stara

From this, going north east after traversing precipitous mountain passes and going 700 h or so, he arrived at the kingdom of Kuluta.

From Kuluta, going about 700 li south across a mountain impe and over a river we arrive at the kingdom of She-to-tu-in (Saladru)

Going south west from this kingdom about 800 li, we come to the kingdom of Po h ve-ta-lo (Pdrudtra)

I rom this, going east about 500 h, we come to the Lingdom of Mo Un-lo (Mathurn)

There are Stupes containing relies of the bodies of Sthy i Tithageti and his holy disciples still existing in this place to wit, of Simputen, of Mandgalyayana, of Purmanatireyaniputen, of Upth, of Ananda, of Rahula, and of Manjusti

Every year, on religious festival days, priests and disciples assemble at these several stupus, according to their school, and offer religious worship and offerings

The followers of the Abindbarma offer to Sarputra; the Quietists (those who practice meditation) offer to Mandally anna, the students of the Sûtras offer to Purnamatitry infinitra, the followers of the Vunaya offer to Upili, the Bhi shums offer to Ananda, the Srimaneras offer to Râlula, the followers of the Great Vehicle offer to the Bödinsatty as

Two or six h to the east of the city there is a monntum Sangharama which was founded by the venerable Upagupta—there are herein relics of his nails and hair

In a precipice to the north of the Sangh'n ima there is a stone house about twenty feet high and thirty feet wide. Within this cave there are heaped up a number of bamboo splints, about four inches long. The venerable Upagupta, when he preached the law and led a husband and wife to the attainment of the fruit of Arhatship, for each one so converted deposited in this cave one bamboo slip: but as to others (not so related) although they attained the fruit, he did not record their conversion.

Going north-east from this about 500 li, we come to Sa-ta-ni-shi-fa-lo (Sthanesvara). Still going east about 400 li we come to Lu-le-na (Srughna?).2

On the east this kingdom borders on the river Ganges, on the north it abuts on a great mountain (range), through its centre flows the river Yamuna (Jumna).

Going about 800 li to the east of this river we come to the source of the river Ganges. This head-stream is about three or four li in width; it flows south-east, and where it enters the sea it is about ten li in width. waters are sweet and soft to the taste, and the stream carries with it sands of extreme fineness. The ordinary books of the country speak of it as the "blessed River;" those who bathe in it are cleansed from sin; those who drink its waters, or even rinse their mouth therefrom, escape from all dangers and calamities, and when they die forthwith are born in heaven, and enjoy happiness.

So the common folk, men and women, are always congregating on the banks of the river. But this is merely the heretical belief of the district, and is not true. In after times, when Dêva Bôdhisattva showed them the right meaning of all this, then the erroneous belief began to disappear.

There was a renowned priest in this kingdom named Jayagupta, who had well studied the Tripitaka. Master of the Law therefore remained here one winter

1 Upagupta, so celebrated in the Buddhist community after the Coun-

Northern Legends, is unknown in the cil of Vaisali.

Pâli Records. This shows the radical character of the separation of the stitute Su-lu-kin-na for the symbols · given in the text: vide Records, i. 186.

and half the spring s as m, and he ral bim explain the Vibhash's according to the school of the Sautrantikas

After this he crossed to the eistern bank of the river and came to the kingdom of Matipuia

The king of this country is of the caste of Súdras. There are some ten Sun harrimas and about eight hundred practs here. They study the Little Velucle, according to the school of the Sarvistinfidins. To the south of the eighted four or five h, there is a hittle Sunghirfima with about fifty priests in it, it was here that Ginappablic of old composed the Prachinal and other Sastras, amounting to about one hundred in all. This doctor was originally a native of Privata, and was a student of the Great Velucle, but afterwards he became attached to the Little Velucle.

At this time the Arlat Divasena and visited the Tushita heaven. Then Gunaprabla wished to see Martreya to dispel some doubts, which landered his relations progress. He therefore asked Divasta to transport him by his spiritual power to the courts of that heaven, having looked upon Maitreya he saluted him without prostrating himself. "I am a religious mendicant (he thought) in full orders, Maitreya occupies this heaven like a layman, it is not becoming that I should prostrate myself in worship before hum."

And so he came and went three times, but rendered bin no homage. He was pussed up by self-conceit and got no explanation of his doubts.

Three or four h to the south of the Sungharama of Gunnprabha, there is a Sangharama with about two hundred priests, who also study the Lattle Vehicle. It was here the Doctor of Sastras called Sanghabhadra ended the years of his his This doctor was originally a nativo of Kasmir. He was a main of distinguished learning and great telents. He thoroughly understood the Vibliasha of the Sarvastivadin school

¹ Jude Records vol i p 191 n

^{2 1} ide the wi ole of this story, Records 1 192

At this time Vasubandhu Bôdhisattva had also distinguished himself for his profound learning. He had already composed the Abhidharma-Kosha-Śâstra to confute the professors of the Vibhâshâ. His deep reasoning and ornate style were the admiration of all Western students. The very spirits and demons also studied and followed his teaching.

From the time of Sanghabhadra's appearance (as an author), his mind had become full of impatient desire.

After twelve years of extended reflection he composed the Kôsha-karikâ-śâstra, in 25,000 ślôkas, and eighty myriad words. Having finished it, he longed for an interview with Vasubandhu, to settle the truth or false-hood of his points. But he died without attaining this object. Afterwards Vasubandhu saw the treatise, and loudly praised its wise comments, and said: "The force of the thoughts herein contained is not inferior to that of the followers of the Vibhâshâ school. Nevertheless, as its leading principles are entirely in agreement with my own, let it be named the Nyâyânusâra Śâstra;" accordingly it was so done, in agreement with this opinion.

After Sanghabhadra's death they erected to his memory a stûpa in an Âmra grove, that still remains; by the side of this grove there is a stûpa which contains the relics of Vimalamitra, a Doctor of Śâstras. This doctor was a native of the country of Kaśmir; he belonged to the school of the Sarvâstavâdins, and had travelled through the five Indias, and was deeply versed in the Tripiṭakas.

Being about to return to his own country, as he passed on his way by the stûpa of Sanghabhadra, he was deeply affected to think that the undertaking of this doctor had not been matured and published before his death; and so, moved by the thought, he took an oath that he would himself compose such treatises as would overcome the principles of the Great Vehicle, and put out the name of

Vasul andhu, and so he thought to perpetuate for ever the farre of the Doctor (Sanghabhadra)

After having and this, his intellect became confused. his bowels and tongue protruded, and his blood burst forth over all his body.1 Then perceiving that the origin of his sufferings was from his perverse views, he tore up his writings and with deep contrition exhorted his disciples never to abuse the principles of the Great Vehicle, and so saying, he died. Where he died the earth opened and there is a crest ditch

In this kingdom there was an eminent priest called Mitras un, mucty years of age. He was a disciple of Consprehe and deeply versel in the Toputakas The Mester of the Law stopped with him half the spring and the summer following, studying the latty ientya fistry, the Abhidharina-mana-prasthana 61stra, and others

Proceeding northward from this 300 h or so, we come to the country of Po-lo-hi-mo-pu-lo (Brahmapura), again south-cast of this, soing 400 le or so, we come to the kingdom of Hi-chi-ta lo (Alikshetri)

Again, going south 200 h or so, we cross the Ganges, and then going south-west we arrive at the country of Pi lo-na 2-na (Virasana)

Agun, going east 200 h or so, we come to the country of Kie-m-tha (Kapitha)

About twenty h to the east of the city there is a Sangharama, within the court of which there are three ladders composed of the precious substances. 3 they are placed (side by side) in a direction from south to north and face the east It was down one of these that Buddha of old descended from the Tarvastruhshas heaven, and returned to Jambudalpa after preaching for the sake of his queen-mother Maya. The middle ladder is of gold,

¹ Records, i. 197
2 Na for than Records, i 201
3 Laterally, ' ti ree precious lal

p 43 n. 2 the author speaks of Maya being re born in the Tus ta heaven a lopting an error of Eitels which he had corrected

In Lagge's translation of Fd hien.

the one on the left of crystal, the one on the right of silver. Tathugata, leaving the Suldharma Hall,1 accompanied by the congregation of Dévas, descended by the middle ladder; Mahabrahma, with a white chowrie in his hand, descended by the silver ladder on the right; whilst on the left Sakradeva, with a precious paragol, came down by the crystal ladder.2

At this time a 100,000 dêvas and the great Bodhisattvas followed him in his descent.

Several centuries ago these ladders existed in their integrity; but at the present time they have disappeared (been swallowed up). Kings who came afterwards, from a principle of affection and respect, have reconstructed the foundations of these ladders with stone and brick, ornamented with various gems, to a height of about seventy feet, and over this they have erected a Vihara, in which is placed a figure of Buddha in stone.3 On the right and left of this statue are the figures of Brahma and Sakra, very glorious in appearance and just as in the original. At the side is a stone pillar in height seventy feet, placed there by Asôka-raja.

Near this is a stone foundation (raised path) fifty paces or so in length, and seven feet high; this is the spot where Buddha formerly paced to and fro.

From this, going north-west 200 li, we come to Kiejo-kio-she-kwŏ (Kanauj).

This kingdom is four thousand li in circuit; the capital borders on the Ganges on the West; it is about twenty li in length, and five or six li across.

There are about 100 Sangharamas and 10,000 priests.

¹ That is, the preaching hall of Sakra. correct enough, and shows that the symbol tang in Fā-hien (cap. 17), referring to this story, ought to be translated "facing" or "opposite to" the middle ladder, &c.

The pricats study the Great and Small Vehicle promis-

The ling is a Bais Rajput! His mamo is Harshavardhana, his father's name was Prakaravardhana, his senior brother was called Rajyavardhana. Harshavardhana, the present king, is virtuous and patriotic, all people celebrate his praises in songs.

At the time (when Rhyarardhana was on the throne) the king of Karu survarna, in Lastern ludia whose name was Swafika-rhja, hating the superior unlitary talents of this king mide in plot and mindered him

Then the great minister Bham? and the subordinate officers, afflicted to see the people without n ruler, a reed to place on the throne his joinings brother Sildatija. His royal appearance and demeanour were recognised, in conjunction with his vast military talents. His qualifications moved heaven and earth, his sense of justice was admired by Dévas and men. Ho was soon able to avenge the injuries received by his brother, and to male himself master of India. His renown was spread abroad everywhere, and all his subjects reverenced his virtues. The empire having gained rest, then the people were at peace

On this ho put an end to warlike expeditions, and began to store up in the magazines, the lanees and swords. He gave himself up to religious duties, he prohibited the slaughter of any hiving creature. He himself set the example and ordered all his people to abstain from flesh ment and he founded Sanghārāmas wherever there were sacred traces of religion.

Yearly during three or seven days (or, perhaps, during three seven days, ie three weeks) he provided food for the whole body of priests

Lvery fifth year he convoked a grand assembly of deliverance (Maha-molisha-parishad) and distributed the ¹ Jule I ecords 1 209 n 12 2 Por I ral 1 & ravarddha a. 2 File Records 1 210 n 18 He 4 Taits Shidhya Harsl avardhana.

stores of his treasuries in charity. To describe all his conduct, would be but to tell again the deeds of Sudâna.1

To the north-west of the city is a Stûpa about 200 feet high.

Six or seven li to the south-east, south of the river Ganges, is a Stûpa also about 200 feet high. Both were built by Aśôka-râja, in places where Buddha had formerly preached the law.

When the Master entered the kingdom he went to the temple called Bhadra-Vihâra. He stopped there three months, and under the direction of Viryasêna, a doctor of the three Piṭakas, he read the Vibhâshâ of Buddhadâsa, which is called Varmavibhasha-vyākaraṇa.²

² I see no other way of translating

this passage. Julien seems to have had a different text. The sentence in my original is, "Yueh (i.e., viz.) chan-pi-po-sha-ki." Instead of yuch, Julien's text seems to have had Shing. Concerning the Vibhasha composed by Buddhadasa, vide Records, i. 230.

¹ That is, Prince Visvantara, the hero of the Wessantara Jataka. He must be distinguished from Sudatta, i.c. Anathapindika. This is plain from a comparison with Sung-Yun's account (Records, I xeviii.) Julien's note therefore (in loc.) is in error.

BOOK III.

For a Ag 3P of to Hinter sparrola.

From this, going 600 h or 50 to the south cast and crossing the Ginges, on the south of the river we come to the kingdom of 'O-ya-to (Ayôlhyā). There are here about one hundred temples with several thousand priests, who study both the Small and the Great Velnele.

In the capital city is no old Singharina. Here the Bodhisattva Vasubuidhii composed his treatices on the Great and Little Vchicle, and preached for the good of the community.

North-west of the city four or five li, and by the side of the river Gauges, is a great Singhuman, in which is n Stupe about 200 feet light. This was built by Abbia abju on the spot where Buddha in old days delivered the Law for three months.

By the side of this Stupa is a spot where the four Buddhas of the past age walked for exercise.

To the south-west of the city five or six h, is an old Saugharium; this is the place where Asaugha Bödhisattva explained the Law. The Bödhisattva, during the night, ascended to the Tuffa heaven, and received from Mürreya Bödhisattva the Yöga-fastra, the Alamkara-Mahayana-fastra, and the Madhyanta-vubhināgha-fastra. The next day he descended from the heaven, and declared the Law for the sake of the community.

Asaugha, who is also called Wu-eho, was a man of Gandhara. He was bern in the middle of the thousand years following the Nivana of Buddha, and became a disciple in the school of the Mahîsâsakas. Afterwards he joined the school of the Great Vehicle. His brother, Vasubandhu, became a disciple in the school of the Sarvâstivâdins, but afterwards joined the Great Vehicle. Both these brothers were, in point of endowments, vessels full of wisdom and holiness. Asangha possessed vast ability in composition, and wrote many sâstras, in explanation of, and comment on, the Great Vehicle. was the principal composer of sastras in India. For example, he wrote the Mahâyâna-samparigraha-śâstra,1 the Prakaranâryavâchâ-śâstra-kârikâ, the Abhidharma śâstra, the Vidyâmâtra-śâstra, the Kosha-śâstra, and others.

¹ That is, the middle of "the period of images," beginning 500 years after the Nirvana.

The Master of the Law left the kingdom of Ayôdhyâ, having paid reverence to the sacred traces, and following the course of the river Ganges, proceeded eastward, being on board a vessel with about eighty other fellow-passen-He wished to reach the kingdom of 'O-ye-mu-khi (Hayamukha).² After going about a hundred li, both banks of the river were shrouded by the thick foliage of an Asôka forest, and amid these trees on either bank were concealed some ten pirate boats. Then these boats, propelled by oars, all at once burst forth into the mid-Some of those in the ship, terrified at the sight, stream. cast themselves into the river, whilst the pirates, taking the ship in tow, brought it to the bank. They then ordered the men to take off their clothes, and searched them in quest of jewels and precious stones.

Now these pirates pay worship to Dûrga, a spirit of heaven, and every year during the autumn, they look out for a man of good form and comely features, whom they kill, and offer his flesh and blood in sacrifice to their divinity, to procure good fortune. Seeing that the Master of the Law was suitable for their purpose, both in respect of his disparabled bearing and his bodily strength and appearance, they exchanged joyful glances and sul, "We were letting the sersen for sacrificing to our god pars by, because we could not find a suitable person for it, but now this Srainan is of not le form and pleasing features—let us kill him as a escrifice and we shall can certain cost fortune

¹ B. Nanj. Cat., No. 1202. ² Vide Records, &c., vol. i. p. 229.

The Master of the law replied " If this poor and defiled body of mine is indeed suitable for the purpose of the exertiser you propose, I, in truth due not grade (the efferire), bit as my intention in coming from a dis truce was to pry reverence to the unige of Bodhi and the Grilliral ita Mountam, and to manne as to the claracter of the Sacred Books and the Law (or, the Law of the Steed Leds), and as this purpose has not yet been accomplished, if you, iny noble benefactors (danapatis) hall this body of mane, I fear it will bring you misforting (instead of good fortune)"

Moreover, has fellow-passengers all, with one voice, asked them to spare him, and some even prayed to be nllowed to die in his sterd, but the parites would not consent.

Then the captain of the tang despitched some men with water to arrange the ground, and to creet in the midst of the flowering grove an alter besideared with mid He then commanded two of the company to take their drawn knives and to bind the Master of the Law upon the altar And now, when they were about to uso their knives for the purpose of evenficing him, the Master of the Law showed no sign of fear in his free, insomuch that all the pimtes were moved to astonishment.

When he saw there was no esenpe, however, he spoke to the pirates and begged them to allow him a little time and not to crowd round him painfully -but "lot me," he said, "with a joyous mind, take my departure"

Then the Master of the Law, with an undivided mind

bent on the courts of Tuśita heaven, thought on the Bôdhisattva Mâitrêya, and earnestly prayed to be born in that place, that he might pay reverence and his religious offerings (to the Bôdhisattva), and receive from him the Yogâchariya-bhûmi-śâstra, and listen to the sound of the excellent Law. Then having perfected himself throughout in wisdom, "let me return (he prayed) and be born here below, that I may instruct and convert these men, and cause them to practise themselves in doing good and to give up their evil deeds, and thus by diffusing, far and wide, the benefits of religion, to give rest to all the world."

Then the Master of the Law, paying worship to the Buddhas of the ten regions, collected his mind into perfect composure, and sitting still, fixed his thoughts on Mâitrêya without any interruption. Thus he seemed in his innermost thoughts as if he rose up above Mount Sumeru and successively ascending one, two, three heavens, he gazed upon the courts of Tusita, the place of Mâitrêva, with its excellently precious adornments (galleries) and the multitude of devas surrounding him on every side. At this time his body and soul were ravished with joy, he knew nothing of the altar on which he was, he had no recollection of the robbers. And now, whilst his fellow passengers gave way to cries and tears, suddenly a black tempest (typhoon) arose from the four quarters of heaven, smiting down the trees; clouds of sand flew on every side; and the lashing waves of the river tossed the boats to and fro. The robbers and their company, greatly terrified, asked the companions of the Master, "Whence comes this Sraman?—what is his name and title?" and so on. They, answering, said: "He comes from the country of China-he is the renowned person who is in search of the Law; if you, my masters, kill him, your guilt will be immeasurable; look now and see the winds and waves—these are but indications of the anger of the spirits of heaven: haste then to repent!"

The pirates then, filled with fear, need each other to per-ntance and conferrent of their fault, then with lowed heads they made profound obsistance for they eril need the religion of Biddla). And now one of the robbers accidentally touching the Master of the Law with his land for, torehing the hand of the Master of the Lar), he opened his eyes and said to the robber, "Has the hour come !" The robber answered, "We dare not hurt the Ma ter! we pray you accept our repentance." The Master then accepted their reverence and conferron of faults, and then presched to them about the future tunishment in Avlcin' of those who gave themselves up to munler, robbery, and impious sacrifices, and other evil deeds. "How would you then risk the woes of the long-during assakhicia of a es for the sike of this boly of yours, which is but in point of time as the habitning flash or the dew of the morning !"

The robbers then lowed their heads and confessed their faults, raying: "We indeed, individually, were perverted by a foolish tone of mind, and led to do what we ought not to do, and to sacrifice. (pay religious rites) to what we ought not to racrifice. If we had not met with the Master—whose religious merit has moved even the mysterious powers of heaven—how should we over have been led to repentance? And now we ask to give in from the present day these evil ways of ours, and we pray the Master to be witness to our sincerity?"

On this they each encouraged one another to deeds of amendment, and collecting their various instruments of robbery together, they cast them into the river, and whatever clothes or private property they had taken, they restored these to their rightful owners, and then they took on themselves the five obligations of a lay-believer.

Then the winds and the floods subsided, and the pirates were all overcome with joy, and bowed their heads in adoration. His fellow voyagers, moreover, were filled with surprise and admiration more than ever, whilst those present and absent who heard of the event could not help exclaiming with wonder at the occurrence: "If it were not for the power of his high resolve in seeking for the Law, this could not have come to pass!"

¹ The lowest of the Buddhist hells

From this, going east about 300 li, after crossing the Ganges to the north side, we come to 'O-yc-muh-khi (Hayamukha).

From this, going south-east 700 li or so, after crossing to the south side of the Ganges, on the north of the River Jumnâ, we come to the country of Prayâga.

To the south-west of the town, in a grove of Champaka flowers, there is a stûpa built by Aśôka-râja. is the spot where in old days Buddha overcame the heretic (or, heretics). By the side of it is a Sangharama. Here Dêva Bôdhisattva composed the enlarged Sata-sâstra and vanquished the heretics of the Little Vehiele. east of the eapital is the spot where the two rivers join, and to the west of this point is a level plain about fourteen or fifteen li in circuit. The ground is perfectly level and straight. From aneient days till now, royal and noble personages endowed with virtue and love, in the distribution of their charitable offerings, have all resorted to this spot for the purpose; and hence the name of the Field of Great Beneficence has been given to it. At the present time Śilâditya râja, following this eustom, has distributed here the accumulated wealth of five years, during a period of seventy-five days. From the three precious objects (Buddha, Dharma, Samgha), down to the poorest orphan, there is no one but has shared in his . bounty.

From this, in a south-west direction, we enter a great forest, in which we frequently encounter evil beasts and wild elephants. After Loing 500 1 it or so, we arrive at Kiau shang-rai (Kaukhuibl)

There are about ten Sungharumas here with some 300 priests. Within the city is an old (or, runned) palice (i.e. palace-precinet) in which is a large. Vil an about sixty feet high, in which is a sandal-wood figure of Buddhi, surmounted by a stone critery, made by King Uddyania.

In old times Tuthagata dwelt during an entire season of Rest in the Trayastranshas heaven for the purpose of preaching to his mother. The king, thinking of him with affection, requested. Mandgalyayana to transport a clever sculptor to this heaven, who might observe the honourable features and figure of Buddlin, and on his return might carre from sandal-wood a true likeness of his appearance.

When the Lord of the World cunc down again, this was the figure which wose to meet him

South of this is a ruined dwelling, the old house of the nobleman Gosira

Not far south of the city is an old Singharama, which was built on the griden-site of this noblemin. In it is a stipp, about 200 feet high, which was raised by Afdharija.

Agam, south-cast of this, is a double-storejed tower, where Vasubandhu composed the Vidyamutra-siddh-Lastra Agant, to the east, is an Åmra grove, in which are some old foundation stones. This is where Asaügha Bödhisattva composed the Prakaranûryavûchû-śûstra kûrikû.

Going about 500 h from this, we come to the kingdom

^{- 1} In my transl tion of the St gu le p 231 I have by mistake such that liwn this (e e to present work) states the d stance as 50 is 2 Chang che

^{*} Kuli This expression is constantly used by Hiuen Islang where Filien only uses the symbol ku sh wing plainly enough that I a hien would denote that the buildings he refers to are in runs. Julen also translates ku by runs, Jul i 122, of Pi-so-kia (Viśákhá). It has about twenty Sanghârâmas and some 3000 priests, belonging to the Sammatîya school of the Little Vehicle.

N B 1202.

On the left-hand side of the road which goes southeast is a great Sanghârâma. This is where in old days the Arhat Devasarman composed the Vijñana-kayapâda-śâstra, which affirms the non-existence of "self," or, of (individual) man. Here also the Arhat Gôpa composed the sastra Shing-Kiau-in-Shih, which affirmed the existence of "self," and of "(individual) man." These views of religious doctrine led to many wrangling treatises.

Here also is the place where Dharmapâla Bôdhisattva during seven days overthrew a hundred writers of sastras belonging to the Little Vehicle. By the side of this spot is the place where Tathagata during six years preached the Law.

There is a tree here about seventy feet high. Here in former days Buddha, having cleaned his teeth, flung the fragments of the wood on the ground. Immediately they took root, and the umbrageous tree which grew up remains there till now. The followers of heretical views often came to destroy it, but as often as they cut it down it grew up again as flourishing and verdant as at first.

Going north-east from this 500 li or so, we arrive at the kingdom of Shi-lo-fu-shi-ti (Śrâvastî). It is about 6000 li in circuit and has several hundred Sanghârâmas and several thousand priests, all of whom belong to the Sammatiya school. The capital of this country was where King Prasênajita dwelt when Buddha was alive.

Within the city there are the old ruins (ku ki) of the king's palace.

Not far east from this is a stûpa erected on some old foundations; this was the spot where stood a great

^{1`}This seems to contradict the account found in the Si-yu-ki Records (ii. 2), unless the symbol "sho" be taken as a verb; the passage would then read, "the Sangharamas amount to 100 and the disciples amount to 1000.

preaching hall erected by King Prasenajita for Buddha's nse.

Next we see a tower; this was whose stood the Viliana of Projapati Bhikshunt, the elder maternal aunt of Raddha.

East of this again is a tower; this marks the spet of the ruined house of Sudatta. By the sile of the house is a great stupa; this is where the Angulimilea pave up his evil design (or, herewi).

Five or six li to the south of the city is the grove of Jeta, the same as "the garden of the Friend of the organis and desolate." There was formerly a Suncharama here.

but now it has been overturned and destroyed.

On the right and left side of the eastern gate " there have been built stone pillars about reventy feet high. These were placed there by Affika raja. All the rooms are completely destroyed except one little stone chamber in which there is a golden figure. This figure was made by King Prasenajita when Buddha in old days accorded to the Trayastriushas heaven to preach for his mother's sake. The king's heart being deeply affected, and hearing that King Udavana had caused a sandal-wood figure to be made, he, on that account, made this one,

Behind the convent, not far, is where the Brahmachari heretic killed the woman and necused Buddha of the murder 8

To the east of the convent about 100 paces is a great chasm; this is where Dovadatta went down alive into hell after trying to poison Buddha. To the south of this, again, is a great ditch; this is the place where the Bhikshu Kukûli went down alive into hell after slandering Buddha. To the south of this, about 800 paces, is the place where house," but hie whole consers shows that Lu has hie sense of what we should call dispidated.

That is, of the "entrucegate" or "principal door; "it is difficult to know what Dr Legge means in his translation of Fa-hien, when he says, ^{&#}x27;I might perhaps any "ruinous "on each side of the door, when open, house," but the whole context shows there was a tone pillar "(o r., p. 50). that is has the sense of what we were the pillar not there when the door was bould call dilapidated.

I have no doubt that the woman Sundari was killed, and not that she killed another.

the Brahman woman Chañscha went down alive into hell after slandering Buddha. All these chasms are without any visible bottom (are bottomless pits).

To the eastward of the Sanghârâma about seventy paces is a Vihâra-Sanghârâma, lofty and large, in which is a sitting figure of Buddha facing the east. This is the place where in old times Buddha disputed with all the heretics.

To the east of this, again, is a Dêva temple equal in size to the Vihâra; when the sun's rays move in the direction of these buildings—the shadow of the Dêva temple does not reach the Vihâra, but the shadow of the Vihâra always enshrouds the temple.

East from this three or four li, is a Stûpa; this is the place where Śâriputra discussed with the heretics.

North-west of the capital city sixty li or so, is an old (ruinous) city. This was the town of the father of Kâśyapa Buddha, who lived during the Bhadra Kalpa when men's lives reached to 20,000 years.

To the south of the city is the place where (this) Buddha first saw his father after having arrived at perfect enlightenment.

To the north of the city is a tower. This tower contains the relics of the entire body of Kâśyapa Buddha. All these were founded by Aśôka-râja.

From this, going south-east about 800 li, we come to the kingdom of Kapilavastu. This country is about 4000 li in circuit; the capital, as well as some 1000 villages, are all waste and ruined. The inner city is fifteen li round; it is completely encircled and is exceedingly strong.¹

Within the city are some old foundations (ku ki)²

¹ But probably there is a mistake in the text, and it should be "it is built of bricks and is," &c.
2 In this and all the following cases belonging to the chief prince of Suddholma ritt. Over these rums a Vihara has been built in which is a figure of the king

To the porth of this, again, are some old foundations. there belong to the sleeping half of Queen Maya this site is built a Vihari, in which is a figure of the queen. By the side of this is a Vihara; this is where Sikya Böllmeattya descended as a spirit,1 into the womb of his mother. In it is placed a picture of Bodhisattva descending to be born

The Sthayers school says that this took place on the 30th day of the month U-tan-lo-an sha-cha (Uttarashadha), descending as a spirit into his mother's womb on that evening. This would be the 15th day of the fifth month (with us) The other schools fix the 23rd day of the month, which would correspond with the 8th day of the fifth month (with us)

To the north-cast of this is a Stupa, this is the snot where the Rishi Asita took the horoscope of the prince no al

On the left and right of the city is the place where the royal prince contende I in athletic sports with the STATES

Again there is the place where the royal prince left the city on horseback (se when he gave up his secular life)

And there are the places where he turned back in his chariot, having first seen outside the four gates, the old man, the sick man, the dead man, and the Sriman, who had given up the world from disgust

1 Julien translates the gassage as Mays) is on the wall of the prince though "thin referred to Mays and (cf v 4 Kieen I of the Bin kilhacethan he makes the expression equal to ride). Bits leads not conserved to be a third wines mother. But this less the descented Bull thansas; it does not until yard in its expressive con one mun tat b descented in the tradit the line the by Bullich William of a leighbant but that he was a col 2 and col 5) where this sail ridings of a leighbant but being a tite jeture of the leavest as a praiswall while I i let Clines with the being no mention of jeture in Leighe 2 the hear 0.65

From this, going through a wild forest about 500 li east, we come to the country of Râma (Râmagrâma). This country has but few houses or inhabitants.

To the east of the old city is a brick Stupa about 100 feet high. After the Nirvana of Tathagata the old king of this country, having obtained a share of the relics (Śariras), returned home and built this stupa. It constantly emits rays of glory.

By the side of it is a Naga tank. The Naga frequently changes his appearance into that of a man, and as such encircles the tower in the practice of religion (i.e. turning religiously with his right hand towards the tower). Wild elephants, with flowers held in their trunks, constantly come to offer their religious offerings.

Close by the side of this Stûpa is a Sangharama of which a Śrâmaṇêra is the subdirector (Karmadana). The tradition is this:—There was formerly a Bhikshu who had induced some fellow-disciples to travel afield to pay reverence (to the sacred spots). Then they saw the wild elephants, carrying flowers in their trunks, lay them down before this tower. And again they saw them dig up the herbage with their tusks, and in their trunks bring water for sprinkling; the company seeing this were astonished and affected with emotion.

There was one Bhikshu in the company who resolved to give up the great rules of moral obligation, and remain there on the spot to render his religious offerings (at the shrine). Speaking to the others, he said: "The wild elephants, beast born as they are, know how to reverence this sacred tower; they gather flowers, and sprinkle water, and sweep! How then can we, belonging to the human race and devotees of Buddha, behold this desert spot and not render our religious assistance!"

So taking leave of his companions he remained there. He constructed a dwelling-place, cleared the land, and planted flawers, and cultivated fruits · he let not a moment pass in idleness, either during winter or summer.

The people of the neighbouring countries, hearing of him, all contributed of their wealth and valuables to construct therewith a Sanchimin, and they be sought this priest to take the direction of the establishment as steward. From this time through successive constitutions things have been ranniged according to this old plan.

Going about 100 h to the eastward of the Schumerr convent through a great forest, we find a Single built by Asola raja. It was here that the prince revail having passed through the city, and reaching this spot, took off his ornaments and clothes and the hair powel of his sacred triers, and gave them to Chin lake. Both here and where he cit off his hair there are commemorative lowers

Having left the forest we come to the kingdom of Ku-shi-na l'ie-lo 1. This place is nite ether desert and waste.

Within the city at the north-east night is a Stupa built by Afolin-raja on the site of the old house of Chinida. In the house is a well which was dug which he was about to tanke his religious offering. The unter of this well is still sweet and clear.

Three or four h to the north west of the town we cross the 'O-shi to fu-lax (Antanath) river. Not far from the bunk of the river we come to n Sala grove. This tree resembles the Ho only its bark is a greenish-blue, and its leaves white, and very shining and listrous. There are four trees in pairs, of equal height, this is the place where Buddha died.

There is a great Vihâra here, built of bricks within which is a figure of the Nirvâna of Tathâgata, his head is towards the north, and his appearance is as if he were asleep. By the side of the Vihâra is a Stûpa nbeut 200 feet high, constructed by Arôka râja. There is, moreover, a stone column standing here, which records the circumstances of the Nirvâna of Buddha, but does not state the year or the month.

The current tradition relates that Buddha lived in the world eighty years, and that he entered Nirvâna the 15th day of the latter half of the month Vaiśâkha, which corresponds with the 15th day of the second month (with us). The school of the Sarvâstivâdins again say that Buddha entered Nirvâna during the second half of the month Kârtika. This would correspond with the 8th day of the ninth month (with us).

Some say that 1200 years have passed since the Nirvâna: others, 1500 years: others, more than 900 years, but not yet the full period of 1000 years.

Again, there are towers erected where Tathagata, sitting up in his golden coffin, preached on behalf of his mother, and stretching out his arms questioned Ananda, and showed his feet to Kasyapa; also where they burnt his body with scented wood, and the eight kings divided his bone-relics.

Again, passing 500 li or so through a great forest, we come to the kingdom of Pó-lo-ni-sse (Bánáras).

This kingdom is about 4000 li in circuit. The capital borders, on the west, on the river Ganges, it is about ten li in length, and five or six li in breadth.

There are about thirty Sangharamas, and 2000 priests who study the teaching of the Sarvastivadins, belonging to the Little Vehicle.

Crossing the Pó-lo-ni-sse river (Varaṇâ), and going north-east ten li or so, we come to the Sanghârâma of the "Stag-desert." The lofty turrets (of the convent) mingle with the clouds, and the long galleries unite at the four corners of the building. There are about 1500 priests here, who study the Little Vehicle according to the Sammatîya school.

Within the great court is a vihâra 100 feet high;

¹ Records, ii. 33, n. 91.

there are stone steps, and brick mehes arranged in regular order round the storeys of the building, in each make is a gilled figure of Buddha.

Within the great hall (or heave) is a figure of Buddha in bass (cilarine rone), of the actual size of Tathharta's body; he is represented as turning the wheel of the law

To the south east of the Vihiri is a stone Stupi, creeted by Aloka-rija, about 100 feet high, in front of it is a stone column about 70 feet high. This is the place where Buddlar first began to preach. By the side of it is the place where Merta-li (Maitri) Bodhusiitia received the predictive assurance.

Again to the west is a Stips, this is the place where it didn in former days was born as Problighila Bollinsitias in the midst of the Bhadra Kapa, when men lived to 20,000 years of age. At this time Kusyapa being Buddles he received a predictive assurance here.

To the south of this spot is a place where the four Buddhas of the past age walked to and fro. In length this terrace is about 500 feet, and in height seven feet It is made of a greenish blue stone and bears on its surface the impression of the four Buddhas walking to and fro.

To the west of the Sanghārbina is the washing tauk of Tathāgita, and where he eleansed his begging dish and washed his elothes. These tanks are protected by Migas, so that no one may defile the water

By the side of the lake there is a Stupe where Buddha, whilst he was practising the preparator; life of a Bodhieatten in the form of a six-tusked white elephant, gave his tird a in charity to a hunter

Here also is the place where, when he was born as a bird, he joined the company of a monkey and a white eliphinit, and in thing a covenant as to their age according to a Nyagrôtha tree, went forth to convert men

¹ Or, covered with trass plates Dr Mitra's Negalese Buddhist Cata
2 Or, Jyotipala Bodt isstitus See logue 1 121, &c.

Again there is the spot where Buddha was born as a deer-king; and also where he converted Kaundinya and the others, altogether five men.¹

From this, following the course of the Ganges for about 300 li eastwards, we arrive at the kingdom of Chen-chu (Ghāzipur). From this, going north-east and crossing the Ganges, after 140 or 150 li, we come to the kingdom of Vāiśālî.

This kingdom is about 5000 li in circuit; the soil is loamy and richly watered; it produces many \hat{A} mra and Mocha fruit-trees. The capital town is waste and in ruins; its old foundations are sixty or seventy li in circuit; the inhabitants are very few in number.

Five or six li to the north-west of the royal precincts is a Sanghârâma, by the side of which is a stûpa; this is the place where in old times Buddha recited the Vimala-kîrtti Sûtra.

Again, three or four li to the north-east of this is a stûpa; this is the site of the ruined house of Vimala-kîrtti; this house is the scene of many strange spiritual portents.

Not far from this is a house constructed from piledup stones; this is the place where Vimalakirtti, when taken with sickness, preached the Law.

By the side of this is the old dwelling of Ratnâkara² and of the Lady Âmradârikâ.

Next, about three or four li to the north, there is a stûpa; this is where Buddha stopped when about to proceed to the kingdom of Kuśinara to attain Nirvâṇa, surrounded by Devas and men.

To the west, again, is the place where Buddha (turned round) to behold Vaisali for the very last time.

¹ For the various fables referred to ² Vide Records, &c., vol. ii. p. 67, in this section, cf. Records, ii. p. 47 n. 70. and following.

Again, to the south, is the three where the Lady Amra lanks erre the grader in climity to B. leller

Acres, there is the three where Buddha convented to afform Nits Justin accord mornithtly erequest of Mars thin

Leaving the synthesis leaders of Va call and following the Ganger river for 100 h or ro, we came to the torn of Sylindry, where the Master cleaned the Shiry called Bielh satti a-p taka i

Arun, roing south and crosung the Guiger mer, we come to the kinglers of Magadia. This kinglom is about 5000 h in circuit. The topulation is harned and lights virtuous. There are about fully Sangharamas and ten thousand priests, mostly attached to the Great Vehicle

To the south of the river there is an old town about revents he in circuit. Although it is waste and desolute. the remiets of the walls still remain

In old days, when men's lives were of immersurable length, then this town was called Kusmmaphra, the cause the ling's prince had so many flowers, it was so called Alternards, when men's lives dwindled down to a few thousand years, then it was called Patahputtra-pura, after the Patali tree 4 (the trumpetflower tree)

One hundred years after the Nirvana there was a king called Afoka, the grant grandson of Banhasaranja; he transferred his court from Rays, ribs to this place. Since then many generations have passed, and now nothing but the old foundations remain, and of several hundred convents only two or three survive

To the north of the old priace (precinet), bordering on the river Ganges, is a little town; this town has about 1000 houses; to the north of the palace there is a stone

¹ This seems to be parentl etles!
2 Records Look viii

Julien gives 600 # 1 y mistake 4 Prolained to mean the city of the a For the atory of this tree, rule from the vol. if p. 83

Cf Diparatusa, vi 15, 18 (Olden ben, a Iranslation) According to this work (r 25 and vi 99) the great grandson of limit belaw awa Sunundya who, in the first passage, is described as the father of Asbia, and it e latter passage spoken of as Asia (Ralits &s, limited of Lecords, it. 85 and 102, pillar several tens of feet high; this is the place where Aśôka made the hell (place of torture).

^{9 41}

The Master of the Law remained in the little city seven days, and paid worship to the sacred traces.

To the south of the place of torture is a Stûpa; this is one of the 84,000 which the king built by the aid of human artificers. Within it is a measure of the relics of Tathâgata, which ever and again exhibit a divine brilliancy.

Again, there is a Vihâra in which is a stone on which Tathagata walked: on the stone is an impression of the feet of Buddha: in length a foot and eight inches, in breadth six inches. Under either foot is the sign of the rooo-spoked wheel, and on each of the ten toes is the mark of the swastika, with figures of flowers, vases, fishes, &c., all of which sparkle with light. the traces left on a great square stone 1 upon which Buddha stood, when, after leaving Vaisalî, he reached this spot, being about to attain Nirvâna; he was on the southern side of the river, and addressed Ananda thus, as he stood: "This is the very last time that I shall gaze (at a distance) upon the Vajrasana 2 and Rajagriha," and the traces of his feet on this stone remained.

To the north of the Vihâra is a stone column about thirty feet high; on this pillar is written a record that Aśôka-râja three times gave the whole of Jambudvîpa in charity to Buddha, Dharma and Samgha, and three times bought back his inheritance (i.e. his empire) with jewels and treasure.

To the south-east of the old city are the ruins of the Kukkutârama 3 convent, which was built by Aśôka

¹ This phrase is omitted by Julien, but it is an important one, as it enables us to identify Pl. xxvi. fig. 1, Tree and Serpent 11 orship, with this

² That is, the diamond-seat, on which he had reached perfect enlightenment.

³ Asokarama, Dip., vii. 59. scene.

rija it was here he consoled the 1000 priests and supposed them with the four lands of religious offerings.

The Ma 'er of the Law paid reverence to all these sacred traces during seven days, visiting them severally

Then going south-west six or seven corners he came to the Tilodika' convent. In this convent, were several tens of prists of the three pipels as (see Fuddhist prices) who hearing of the arrival of the Master of the Law came out in a body to nect and escort him.

From this ngain, proceeding southwards too h or so, we come to the Redlin tree. The tr o is protected by high and very solid brick walls, the wall stricking east and west is long, but narrower from north to south The principal gate faces the cast looking towards the river Ni-len shan (Nairanjina). The southern gate borders on a great flower-tank. The west a mountain saide protects. The north gate leads into the great Sangharama. Within this on every side are the sacred traces of religion, withins, stapps, and so on, all of which kings and great ministers and rich nobles have constructed from a principle of reverence, and for the perpetual momory (of their religion).

In the centre of the whole enclosure is the Diamond throne, which was perfected at the beginning of the Bhadra Kalpa, and rose up from the ground when the world was formed It is the very central point of the universe, and goes down to the golden wheel, from whence it rises upwards to the earth's surface. It is perfected of diamond, and is about 100 paces round. In using the world diamond we mean that it is firm and indestructible, and sible to resist all things. If it were not for its support the earth could not remain, if the seat were not so strong as diamond, then no part of the world could

^{1 1} ele the Diparansa vii 57 58 59 The statement in the Text, agreeing as it does with the Dipavames, evidently refers to the third

Bud thist council held under Dham masoka. Of I coords, ii p 95 * I ade Records ii p 102 n * adolfror det support one who has entered the samâdhi of perfect fixedness (vajra samâdhi).

And now, whoever desires to conquer Mâra, and to attain perfect wisdom, must sit here; if it were assayed elsewhere, the earth would overtop itself. Therefore, the 1000 Buddhas of the Bhadra Kalpa have all attained their emanicipation here.

But again, the place of completed wisdom is also called the arena of wisdom (Bôdhimanda). If the world were shaken to its foundations (overturned), this place alone would not be moved.

After one or two hundred years from the present time, the merit of the human family becoming less, on coming to the Bôdhi tree, the Vajrasana will no longer be seen.

After the Nirvâna of Buddha the kings of the different countries agreed to define the limits (of this sacred enclosure) towards the north and south 1 from the point of the two images of Kwan-tsze-tsai Bôdhisattva, which are seated looking towards the east. According to tradition, when these images of the Bôdhisattva become invisible, then the Law of Buddha will perish. The southern image has already been swallowed up as far as the breast.

The Bôdhi tree is the same as the Pippala tree (Ficus religiosa).

Whilst Buddha was in the world the height of the tree was several hundred feet; but as wicked kings have continually cut it down and destroyed it, the tree is now only about fifty feet high. As Buddha, whilst sitting beneath this tree, reached perfect wisdom (anuttara Bôdhi), it is therefore called the Bôdhi tree. The bark is of a yellowish white colour, and its leaves of a shining green; it retains its leaves through the autumn and winter; only, when the day of Buddha's Nirvâṇa comes, the leaves all fall off, but when the day has passed, they all grow again. Every year on this day the kings of the countries, the ministers and magnitudes, assemble beneath the tree, and your milk on its roots and light lamps and scatter flowers, then collecting the leaves, they retire!

¹ The passage evidently refers to the territories of the kings, as Julien the limits of the Bodhimanda, not to translates.

The Master of the Law when he came to wership the Boihi tree and the figure of TathLatt at the time of his reaching perfect wisdom, made (afterwards) by (the interportion of) Mhitriya Bodhusattva, gared on these objects with the most encere devotion, he cast himself down with his face to the ground in worship, and with much grief and many teats in his self-affliction, he righed, and said: "At the time when Buddha perfected himself in wisdom, I know not in what condition I was, in the troublous whirl of birth and death; but now, in this latter time of image (worship), having come to this spot and reflecting on the depth and weight of the body of my evil deeds, I am grieved at heart, and my eyes filled with tears."

At this time there happened to come to the spot, from different quarters, a body of priests who had just broken up from their religious retreat, numbering several thousand men; these persons, when they beheld (I the Maxler) were all moved to pity and sorrow.

For a ydjana around this spot the space is full of sacred traces. The Master therefore remained hero for eight or nine days to pay his worship at each spot successively.

On the tenth day he went to the Nalanda temple; the congregation there had selected four of their number, of distinguished position, to go and meet him; journeying in their conapany about seven yojanas he reached the farm-house belonging to the temple. It was in (the village, where) this house (stands), that the l Perhaps this is the reason why it is sometimes called the Pesto, i.e., "the leaf tree."

For I translate cheang.

honourable Maudgalyâyana was born. Halting here for short refreshment, then, with two hundred priests and some thousand lay patrons, who surrounded him as he went, recounting his praises, and carrying standards, umbrellas, flowers and perfumes, he entered Nâlanda.

Having arrived there he was joined by the whole body of the community, who exchanged friendly greetings with the Master, and then placing a special seat by the side of the Sthavira (presiding priest), they requested the Master to be seated. The others then also sat down.

After this the Karmadâna 1 was directed to sound the Ghanṭa and proclaim: "Whilst the Master of the Law dwells in the convent, all the commodities used by the priests and all the appliances of religion are for his convenience, in common with the rest."

Then selecting twenty men of middle age, skilful in explaining the religious books and of dignified carriage, they deputed them to conduct the Master to the presence of Ching-fa-tsong (treasure of the good law). This is the same as Silabhadra.

The congregation, from the excessive respect they have to him, do not venture to call him by his name, but give him the appellation of Ching-fa-tsong.

Whereupon, following the rest, he entered to salute this eminent person. Having seen him, then the chief almoner presented him (i.e. Silabadra) with all things necessary without stint, paying his respects according to the proper ceremonial, approaching him on his knees and kissing his foot, and bowing his head to the ground. The usual greetings and compliments being finished, Fatsong ordered seats to be brought and spread out, and the Chinese rendering "Chi sse," he who knows things, or, business. He is, according to Julien, also called Karmadana, which appears to be allied to the Chinese him (karma). The Pali equivalent in Bhattuddesako.

¹ In the original Wei-na, i.e. Vena, "the early riser." He is the subdirector of the Convent. Vena, in the sense of the rising sun, or, the early riser, is found in the Rig-Veda, vide Wallis, "Cosmology of the Rig Veda," p. 35. But Vena has also the sense of the "Knower," and hence them sincerely; take your affliction quietly and patiently; labour diligently in explaining the Sûtras and Śâstras; you will thus get rid of your pain yourself; but if you loathe your body, there will be no cessation to your sufferings.'

"The Master having heard these words, paid his adorations with the utmost sincerity.

"Then the golden-coloured one, pointing to the one that shone like crystal, said to the Master: 'Dost thou know or not that this one is Avalôkiteśvara Bôdhisattva?' and then pointing to the silver-coloured one he added: 'and this is Mâitreya Bôdhisattva.'

"The Master immediately paid worship to Mâitreya and asked him, saying: 'Your servant Śilabhadra has ever prayed that he may be born in your exalted palace courts, but he knows not whether he will gain his wish or not.' In reply, he said, 'You must widely disseminate the true law, and then you shall be born there.'

"The golden-coloured one said: 'And I am Manjuśri Bôdhisattva. Seeing that you desired to get rid of your life, contrary to your true interest, we are come to exhort you to the contrary; you should rely on our words, and exhibit abroad the true law, the Yoga sastra and the rest, for the benefit of those who have not yet heard it. Your body will thus by degrees become easy and you will suffer no further pain. Do not overlook that there is a priest of the country of China who delights in examining the great Law and is desirous to study with you: you ought to instruct him carefully.'

"Fă-tsoug having heard these words worshipped and answered: 'I shall obey, according to your honourable instructions.' Having said this, they disappeared.

"From that time the sufferings of the Master from his disease came to an end."

The company present hearing this history were all filled with wonder at the miraculous event.

The Master of the Law having hand for himself this narrative was unable to control his feelings of sympaths and joy. He again judding respects and rund. If it is many usary then things respects on the utility as you ray, then things respect on given relies as africal Would that your navernee, of his great compass on would receive us for the number of instruction."

Then Intery asked him further "For how many cars have you been on your journey?" He maword, "During three years," and so, as at a particulars of his our citiens received in his dram wen completely fulfilled, to caused the Master of the Law to regime in their re'ationship as Master and disciple.

After these words he retired and went to the college of Bala litya rain and tool up his resilence in the dwelling of Pad llabla les, having four storess for, the fourth Force), who entertained him for seven days. After this le went to reade in a dwelling to the north of the abode of Dharmajala Bodh attan where he was proyeled with every sort of chantable offering. Lach day he received 120 Janubras, 20 Pin long tien (phat area nut) 20 tau-l'au (nutmegs) an ounce (tail) of Camphor. and a ching (seck) of Mahitth rice. This rice is as large as the black bean and when cooked is aromatic and shining, like no other rice at all It grows only in Macadha, and nowhere else. It is offered only to the ling or to religious persons of great distinction, and hence the name kung-ta-jin-mai (ie rice offered to the areat householder)

I very month he was presented with three measures of oil, and doily a supply of butter and other things according to his neel

A pute brother (a Upāsala) and a Brahman, relieved

A fiult brother Of Fahien cap, lil I ro-Julen tim slates tring jin by lably lowever it lat better be frama i but it eviler tips cars a law trabulatel a Brahmachder from all religious duties, accompanied him with a riding elephant.

In the Nâlanda convent the abbot entertains a myriad priests after this fashion, for besides the Master of the Law there were men from every quarter; and where in all their wanderings have they met with such courteous treatment as this?

The Nâlanda monastery is the same as the "charity' without intermission" monastery. The tradition of the old people is this:—To the south of the convent, in the middle of an Âmra garden, is a pool. In this pool is a Nâga called Nâlanda, and the convent built by the side of the pool is therefore called after his name. Again there is a saying that Tathâgata whilst a Bôdhisattva was the king of a great country and built his capital in this place. He was deeply affected towards the orphans and destitute, and, ever moved by this principle, gave away all he had for their good. In memory of this goodness they named the place "doing charitable acts without intermission."

The place was originally the garden of the lord (Shreshtin) Âmra² (or, Amara). Five hundred merchants bought it for ten lacs of gold pieces, and presented it to Buddha. Here Buddha preached the law for three months, and most of the merchants obtained the fruit of Arhatship, in consequence.

After the Nirvâṇa of Buddha an old king ³ of this country called Śakrâditya, from a principle of loving obedience to Buddha, built this convent.

After his decease his son Buddhagupta-râja seized the throne, and continued the vast undertaking; he built, towards the south, another Sañghârâma.

Then his son⁴ (successor) Tathâgata-râja built a Sanghâ-râma to the eastward.

4 The expression chi-tsz' need not

¹ Records, 167, n.
² Vide Max Müller's India, p. 327.

² Vide Max Müller's India, p. 327. ³ Or, a former king, vide p. 112, infra, n. 1.

mean "his son," but his direct descendant. This would reconcile the two accounts in the Si-yu-ki and here. Vide Records, ii. 168.

Next, his son (or, direct descendant) Bladitya ! built a Sanghatawa to the north-cast. Afterwards the king. seeing some triests who came from the country of Chius to receive his religious offerings, was filled with gladness, and les gave up his royal estate and becarie a recluse,"

His son2 Vairs succeeded and built another Sing-

history to the north

After him a king of Mid-India built by the side of this quother Sangharina.

Thus six kings in connected succession added to these structures.

Moreover, the whole establishment is surrounded by a brick wall, which encloses the entire convent from without. One gate opens into the great college, from which are separated eight other halls, standing in the unfille (of the Singhardma) The richly aderned towers, and the fairy-like turrers, like pointed hill-tons, are congreented together. The observatories seem to be lost in the vapours (of the morning), and the upper rooms tower above the clouds.

From the windows one may see how the winds and the clouds (produce new forms), and above the sorring caves the conjunctions of the sun and moon fmay be cbserred).

And then we may add how the deep, translucent ponds, bear on their surface the blue lotus, intermingled with the Kic-ni (Kanala) tlower, of deep red colour. and at intervals the Amra groves spread over all, their aliside

All the outside courts, in which are the priests' chambers, are of four stages The stages have dragonprojections and coloured eaves, the pearl-red pillars. carved and ornamented, the richly adorned balustrades.

2 Pecords, vol is 169 2 Here the expression denotes that

¹ Lalfalitys = the young or ruing sun May we compare with this Lall is (Minerva)? Vejra was the son of Baladitya, and this agrees with the Si yu Ii and the roofs covered with tiles that reflect the light in a thousand shades, these things add to the beauty of the scene.

4 Butta frondeta (M. Williams' Sc.
Diet sv.)

The Sangharamas of India are counted by myriads, but this is the most remarkable for grandeur and height. The priests, belonging to the convent, or strangers (residing therein) always reach to the number of 10,000, who all study the Great Vehicle, and also (the works belonging to) the eighteen sects, and not only so, but even ordinary works, such as the Vêdas and other books, the Hetuvidyâ, Śabdavidyâ, the Chikitsâvidyâ, the works on Magic (Atharvaveda), the Sankhya; besides these they thoroughly investigate the "miscellaneous" works. are 1000 men who can explain twenty collections of Sûtrâs and Sastras; 500 who can explain thirty collections, and perhaps ten men, including the Master of the Law, who can explain fifty collections. Śîlabhadra alone has studied and understood the whole number. His eminent virtue and advanced age have caused him to be regarded as the chief member of the community. Within the Temple they arrange every day about 100 pulpits for preaching, and the students attend these discourses without any fail, even for a minute (an inch shadow on the dial).

The priests dwelling here, are, as a body, naturally (or, spontaneously) dignified and grave, so that during the 700 years since the foundation of the establishment,2 there has been no single case of guilty rebellion against the rules.

The king of the country respects and honours the priests, and has remitted the revenues of about 100 villages for the endowment of the convent. Two hundred householders in these villages, day by day, contribute of Buddhism.

¹ That is, the eighteen schools (p'u)

2 This seems to throw light on the date of Sakraditya, if he "after the Nirvana," was the first to found the Nalanda Convent, and this was 700 years before Hiven-Tsiang, we may suppose he lived about the first century B.O. The expression, therefore, in the Si-yu-ki, "not long after" (Records, ii. 168), must be taken, cum grano, to mean "a good while after."

several hundred piculs' of ordinary rice, and several hundred catties2 in weight of butter and milk. Hence the students here, being so abundantly supplied, do not require to ask for the four requisites.3 This is the source of the perfection of their studies, to which they have arrived.

The Master of the Law having resided in the Nalanda Temple for some time, then proceeded towards Rajagriha to examine, and pay reverence to, the holy traces there.

The old city of Rajagriha is that which is called Kiushe-kic-la po-lo (Kusugarapura). This city is in the centre of Magadha, and in old times many rulers and kings lived in it. This land, moreover, produces some excellent seented grass (Kuśa), and hence the name given to the city. On the four sides it is entirely shut in by lofty and steep mountains, as if they had been cut out (like a wall). On the west side the approach is through a narrow passage; but passing in from the north, is a large gate. The land is extended from north to south and narrow from east to west; it is about 150 li in circuit. Within it is another little town, the foundation walls being about thirty li round On every side are forests of the Kanaka tree, which flower all the year round, the petals being of a golden colour,

" Outside the north face of the royal precinct there is a stûpa; this is the spot where Devadatta in conjunction with Ajatasatru raja let loose the treasure-protecting drunken elephant wishing to destroy Buddha.

North-east of this is a stupa; this is the spot where Śariputra heard the Bhikshu Asvajita explain the Law and in consequence attained the fruit (of Arhatship).

Not far to the north of this is a large and deep ditch

I t picul = 1331 lbs.

2 t catty = 160 lbs

5 Clothes, food, bedding, and medi-4 Called Ratnapala or Vasupila, according to Rockhill (Lefe of the Buddha, p 93), or Dhanapála, ac cording to Spence Hardy (Manual P 321). The seeme at Aj inta (Spence Auc. India, p 290) has been rightly identified with this episode. Vide Records, in 175

this is the place where Śrigupta, obeying the words of the heretics, desired to destroy Buddha by fire (conecaled in) the ditch, and by poisoned food.¹

Again, to the north-east of the great ditch, in a corner of the mountain city, is a Stûpa; this is the place where the great physician, Jîvaka, built a preaching hall for Buddha. By the side of it is the old house of Jîvaka, still visible.

Going north-east of the palace-city (i.e. Kuśagarapura) fourteen or fifteen li, we come to the mountain called Ki-li-to-lo-kiu-to (Gridhrakûta). This mountain is a connected succession of ridges, the northern peak, rising grandly above the rest, stands up boldly by itself, and is in shape like a vulture; it also has the form of a high tower; hence its name (Tower, or Peak of the Vulture). The springs are clear, the rocks singular in shape, and the trees covered with rich verdure.

When Tathâgata was in the world he used frequently to live here, and it was here he declared the Fă-hwa (Saddharma pundarika), the Ta-pan-jo (Mahaprajña), and other sûtras innumerable.

Going through the north gate of the mountain city one li or so, we come to the bamboo garden of Kalanda, where there is still a brick house.

Here Buddha in old time often dwelt, and here he laid down the binding rules of the Vinaya. The owner of this garden was called Karanda; he had before given this garden in charity to different heretics, but after he had seen Buddha and heard the deep truths of his Law, he was sorry that he had not given the garden in charity to Tathâgata. The earth-spirit, knowing his thoughts, caused such prodigies to appear as frightened the heretics, and then, with a view to make them go away, he spake as follows: "The lord of the place wishes to give this garden in charity to Buddha: you had better begone quickly I" The herotics, concealing their vexation, went away Then the lord of the place, filled with joy, built a Vibari, and when he had finished it he went and invoked Buddha to come there and reside, so Buddha accepted the place as a gift.

¹ This history of Śrigupta's plot forms the fifth story in the Jataka-mala-Sastra.

To the east of the garden is a stupe which was built by Ajatasatrii rajn After the Nirvana of Tathazata the different kines received a portion of his relies. Atltasatru rain, having got his share, coming back, built n tower for the purpose of paying them religious worship Asoka inja, exciting his heart to religion desired to build in every place seered edifices, and so he opened this tower and took the relies, but he let a small portion of them remain, which, even down to the present time, on occasions, emit a brilliant light

Going south west from the Bamboo garden five or six li, by the side of a mountain, there is another garden, of the same sort, in which is a great house 1 This is where the honourable Maha Kasyapa with 999 Arhats after the Nirvana of Buddha, collected together the three Pitakas

At the time of the collection there were nn imminer able number of holy persons assembled together, like told infinite of noty persons assembled together, face clouds Kâsyapa addressing them, said 'Among those present those may remain who have a personal knowledge of the three vidyas, and who possess the six supernatural powers and have completely mastered the entire treasure of the Law of Buddha, without flaw or omission Of the rest let cach return to his place of residence?

There remained, in consequence, 999 men who were Arhats, in the selected place of study

On this Kusyapı addressed Anında You have not yet got rid of all remnins (leaks, ie human frailties), do not soil, by your presence, this pure congregation"

Ananda, ashuned, retired During the night, how-

That is the Satta anni cave But refer to Records in p 156 n ever, by diligent application, he snapped the bonds of the three worlds, and became perfect as an Arhat.

Then returning he came and humbly bowed at the door of the assembly.

Kâśyapa then asked him, saying: "Art thou free from fetters?"

He replied: "Yea!"

Then he added: "If it is so indeed, there is no need to unfasten the door and open it; enter in as thou wilt!"

Ananda then entered in through a small crevice in the door, and saluted the feet of the priesthood.

Then Kâsyapa taking his hand, said: "I was anxious that you should get rid of all imperfections, and obtain the holy fruit, and so excluded you; knowing this, you should have no grudge in your heart."

Ananda said: "If I felt any grudge, how could I be said to be free from fetters?"

On this he saluted him respectfully and sat down.

They then kept the first fifteen days of the Rain-Rest. Kâsyapa addressing Ananda, said: "Tathâgata always termed you in the congregation a disciple, or listener (Sêkha), who thoroughly knew the laws of religion. You may therefore now mount the pulpit, and for the sake of the assembly recite the Sûtra piṭaka, which is the same as all the Sûtras."

On this Ânanda, obeying the mandate, arose, and after bowing down towards the mountain of the Parinirvâna of Buddha (his grave, or, the place of his death), he mounted the pulpit and repeated the Sûtras. The congregation received them at his dictation and wrote them down. Having so recorded them, he (Kâśyapa) requested Upâli to recite the Vinaya pitaka, that is, the whole body of the Moral Rules.

This being done, Kâśyapa himself recited the Abhidharma piṭaka, i.e. the collection (Sûtra) of the meaning of the Śâstras.

¹ Lotus, p. 296.

Dung the net of the three months having furshed the offiction of the three I takes, and mornised them or leaf of the Polos (the pairs leaf), they then distributed them everywhere for the.

Then the I by men and one to another, "Our collection may we I be terried "the moult of the grodness, or kindness of Boddles," for from this alone (i.e. his grodness, or kindness of Boddles," for from this alone (i.e. his grodness, or kindness of Boddles, but the timel as of hearing."

From the fact of Katyapa being the providint among the priests, this collection (or, assembly) is called that of the Sthartes.

Twenty h to the west of this place is a Stupe built by Albha-raja, this is the sp t where the assembly of the first Concretation (Mal 1811 tisles) was held.

The many thousand prests both of those who had a school complete wisdom, and those of inferior condition, who were not admitted to the assembly of Katyana all collected here and said among thomschees: "During Tail Again's lift time, we had all one master, but now the Lord is dead, they have excluded us by their vote; why should not we also make a collection of the Dharma pilaka, in a turn for the goodness of Buddha?"

So they made another collection of the Sütra-pilaka, and the Viraya-pitaka, and the Abladharma-pitaka, and of the Miscellaneous-pijaka, and the Dharanl-pitaka, five pitak is in all

As in this assembly there were both ordinary persons 2 and holy men present, it is called the convocation of the Mahleshelmkas.2

North-east of this three or four hi we come to the town of Rangrilm; the outside walls have been destroyed, within the city there are still latty (buildings).

¹ Sticha and asaicha, ride Lot, at support in the usual ac support in the first from the usual ac count which derives the Mildang the Itali puttuyana it is a school from the schiam at Vatsalt.

It is about twenty li round, and has one gate.

Formerly, when Bimbisâra râja lived in Kuśâgârapura, the population was large and the houses were closely packed. In consequence of this the calamity of fire was of frequent occurrence. So a decree was made that in whatever house a fire next occurred through negligence, that the owner should be expelled and placed in the "cold forest." The "cold forest," in that country, means the evil place where they cast the dead.

Shortly afterwards the royal palace suddenly caught fire and was destroyed; the king said: "I am a ruler of men: if I transgress and do not act in agreement with the law, I cannot repress the lower orders in transgressing."

He then ordered the Prince royal to conduct the government during his absence, and he himself went to reside in the cemetery.

At this time the king of Vaisalî hearing that Bimbisara was living alone in the desert beyond the city, was anxious to summon his troops and to capture him. The outpost guards, finding this out, informed the king, and fortified the place where he was. And because the king first dwelt here, they therefore called the place Râjagrilia. This is the new city. Afterwards the King Ajâtasatru established his authority here in succession to his father—and it remained so, till Asôka-râja removed the capital to Pâṭaliputra and gave the old town to the Brâhmans: so now in the city, there are only about 1000 families of Brâhmans.

Within the palace-city towards the south-west corner there is a Stûpa: this is the site of the ruinous house of Jyôtishka, the nobleman.² By the side of it is the place where Râhula was received as a disciple.

To the north-west of the Nâlanda convent there is a great Vihara in height about 200 feet, which was built by Bild hits rija. It is bi hly decorated and of an imposing chiracter. In it there is an image of Buddha th same as the image under the Bollin Tree. To the north est of the Vihara is a Stipa, the site

^{1 &}quot;The house of the king."

² Chang-chc.

To the north cost of the Vihari is a Stapa, the site whire Buddha formerly presched the law for seven days

To the north-west name is a place where the four pas' Buddhas sat down

To the south of this is the brass-covered Vihari construct d by Silida'ia riya, the worl, though not yet finished, is sufficiently all meed to show that its plan denotes a height of 100 feet and more when completed

Again to the east about 200 Jaces is a copper time of Buddha about eighty feet high housed over by a privilion in six stages. This was the work of Pürnavarmatiya in old daya.

Again going eastward several h there is a stupa which denotes the place where Bunhistmarija with many injurieds of people, went to meet and first saw Buddha, who having arrived at supreme wisdom, was directing his way towards the city of Rajagriba

Again going east thirty h or so we come to the Indra-

In front of a Saugharana on the eastern chiffs is a stupe called Hathsa.

lorincity this Safitharam was given to the doctrine of the Intile Vehicle called the 'gradual stage,' which termits the use of the three pure condiments. On one occasion the steward of the establishment, not having been able to procure the necessary provisions, was standing by the side in great distress, seeing no mode of escape (at a loss what to do), when he beheld a flock of wild goeso flying past, then he cried out in jest—'To day the priests are in dire want, my good masters! recognise the opportunity!" Having spoken these words, the leading goose, on the sound of the appeal, turned and fell down from the clouds on high, and lay his body prostrate. The Bhikshu having seen (this miracle), filled with astonishment and fear, spread the news abroad among the fraternity. The priests had nothing to say in reply, on hearing the news; but filled with reverential fear, with many sighs and tears, they talked together and said: "This is a Bôdhisattva! What man among us would dare to taste the flesh?" When Tathâgata established his "gradual method" of instruction, he forbade us to suppose that these early words of his, were intended to be final; he warned us against foolishly supposing there could be no change, and hence this admonition!

From that time and afterwards they adopted the method of the Great Vehicle, and used no more the three pure aliments.

Then they built a "spiritual tower," for the burial of the dead goose, and signified thereby for the good of posterity, their mind in so doing. Such was the origin of this tower.

Thus the Master of the Law having visited the sacred traces all round, and paid his reverence to them, returned to the Nâlanda Monastery, and requested Śilabhadra, Master of the Law, to explain the Yôga-śâstra, in the presence of many thousand auditors.

The exposition being ended, after a little time there was a Brahman who uttered some piteous cries outside the assembly, and then in turn began to laugh.

Some messengers asked him why he acted so.

In reply he said: "I am a man of Eastern India; formerly I made a vow (prayer), in the place where the image of Avalôkitêśvara stands on the Pôtaraka Mountain, that I might become a king.

"Bodhisattva then appeared for my sake and reproved

¹ This amounts to a declaration of belief in the principle of "religious development,"

me, saying 'Make not such a priver as this hereafter, in such a year and month and day, the Master of the Law, Silabhadra, for the sake of a priest of China, will explain the Yor fistra, you should go there and listen! from hearing this discourse you will hereafter be able to see Buddha what good then in being a ling?'

"And now," he said, "I have seen the priest of China come, and the Master for his sale expounding the law, m agreement with the old proplices, and this is why I

ween and laugh "

On this account the Master of the Law, Silabhadra, requested him to remain there and listen to the expla nation of the Sutras for fifteen menths and after the lectures, he sent a man with the Briliman to Siladity a rin who allotted him the revenues of three villages for his sustenance

The Master of the Law whilst he stopped in the convent, heard the explanation of the Yoga fistra, three times the Ny iya Annsara-sastra, once, the Hin hiangtur-fd-ming, once, the Heturidan fistra and the Salvinvidy and the Isah liang fastras, twice, the Pranyamala sistra tika and the Sata-sastra, thrice The Kosha Vibhashi, and the Shatpadibhidharma fistras, he had already heard explained in the different parts of Kasmir, but when he came to this convent he wished to study them again to satisfy some doubts he had this done, ho also devoted himself to the study of the Brahman books and the work called Vyakarana on Indian letters, whose origin is from the most remote date, and whose author ıs unknewn

At the beginning of each Knlpa, Brahma raja first declares it, and then transmits it for Devas and men to use Being thus declared by Brahma-raja, therefore men call it Ian, or Brahma, writing The words of this book are very extensive, comprising a hundred inyriad slokas It is the same as the old commentary calls the Vy ikara(na) ś istra But this pronunciation is not complete, if correct it would be Vyâkaraṇam, which is another name for "a treatise relating to the record of the science of sounds." It treats at large, in a mnemonie way, on all the laws of language and illustrates them, hence the name.

At the beginning of the Kalpa of perfection (vaivarta kalpa) Brahma-râja first declared this book; it then comprised 100 myriad of ślôkas; afterwards, at the beginning of the Vaivarta-siddha-Kalpa, that is, the kalpa, or period, of establishment, Ti-shih (Śakra-raja) reduced them to ten myriad ślôkas. After this a Brahman of the town Śâlâtura in Gandhâra of North India, whose name was Pâṇini Rishi, reduced them to 8000 ślôkas. This is the work at present used in India.

Lately a Brahman of South India, at the request of a king of South India, reduced them further to 2500 ślókas. This work is widely spread, and used throughout all the frontier provinces, but the well-read scholars of India do not follow it as their guide in practice.

This then is the fundamental treatise relating to sounds and letters of the Western world, their branch-divisions, distinctions and mutual connections.

Again, there is a Vyâkaraṇam work (mnemonic treatise) of a short kind having 1000 ślôkas; again, there is one of 300 ślôkas on the roots (bases) of letters (i.e. letter roots or bases); again, there are (treatises on the) two separate kinds of letter-groupings, one named Mandaka in 3000 ślôkas, the other ealled Uṇâdi in 2500 ślôkas. These distinguish letter-groupings from letter-roots. Again, there is the treatise ealled Ashta-dhâtu (Dhâtu vritti?) in 800 ślôkas; in this work there is a brief conjunction of letter-bases and letter-groupings. These are all the Vyâkaraṇa treatises.

In distinguishing active and passive expositions (i.e. in expounding the principles of grammar, relating to active and passive verbs) there are these two rules: the first, ealled Ti-yen-to-shing (Tiñanta-vâjyam) having eighteen inflections, the second Su-man-to-shing (Subanta rayam), having twenty-four inflections, the Tinauta "sounds" are used in elegant compositions, but seldom in hight literature The twenty-four "sounds" are used in all kinds of composition alike. The eighteen inflections of the Tifinita "sounds" are of two characters. 1st. Parasnini, 2nd, Atmane, each of these has nine inflections, and so together there are eighteen With respect to the mae which come first we know that in ordinary discourse everything has three ways of being viewed, (ve as one thing, or two things, or many things), every other person has three ways of being considered (i.e. as one other, two other, or many other), and also "oneself" can bo considered in three ways (ie as I myself, two of us, or many of us) Thus every single thing may be regarded in these three ways, as one, two of a class, or many, hero then are three (three persons and three numbers, altogether nine) In both (toices) the root-word is the samo, but the (final) sounds are different So there are two sets of nine

Now, taking the Parasmai sounds we may speak of a thing as existing or not existing, in all cases. Supposing then we says a thing exists, there are three ways of putting (naming) this fact, we may say "it exists" (bhavati) or, "two things exist" (bhavapa) or, "they exist" (bhavati). And so, speaking of another, we may say "thou dost exist" (bhavash), or, "you two exist" (bhavatiah), or, "you all exist" (bhavatha), and so again speaking of oneself we may say "I exist" (bhavatin), or, "we two exist" (bhavatiah), or, we all exist (bhavatiaha).

With regard to the nine case-endings of the Atmane class, they simply take underneath the nine inflections just named the word "vyati," (or, the words ve, ya, ti), in other respects they are the same as the above?

¹ hor Blas tak
2 This passage is omitte I by Julieu
He gives however, a note found im the original, which states that in the four Vedus (I eda fartias) the form bhatamah is used, but elsewhere the form is bhatamas

Thus touching these things, we see how a skilful writer in this language is saved from ambiguity, and also how his meaning may be expressed in the most elegant manner.

With respect to the twenty-four inflections of the Subanta "sound (endings)," it is to be observed that every word has altogether eight inflections (cases), and that each of these cases or inflections is subject to three conditions as to number, viz., when one, or two, or many, are concerned. Hence arise the twenty-four (soundcndings). Then, again, in connection with these twentyfour inflections we have three other terms, viz., the masculine sound ending, the feminine, and the neuter. But regarding the eight inflections, the first exhibits the substance, or basis, of the thing conceived (nominative); the second exhibits the deed done (objective); the third, the means by which, and the doer (instrumental); the fourth, for whom the thing is done (dative); the fifth, what causes the thing (ablative); the sixth, whose is the thing (genitive); the seventh, that which determines (localises) the thing (locative); the eighth, the calling, or summoning, the thing (vocative). Now, for example, let us take the masculine ending, as in the word "man," and go through the eight cases named above.

The word "man" in Indian speech is Purusha. The root-word has three inflections, viz., Purushah, Purushau, Purushas. The thing done (object) has three, Purusham, Purushau, Purushan; the instrument by which the thing is done by the doer has also three inflections—Purushéna, Puru(sha)bhyam, Purushabhih or Purushais; "for whom the thing is done," Purushaya, Purushabhyam, Purushshéshu; "the cause from which the thing proceeds," Purushat, Purushabhyam, Purushahu; "whose is the thing," Purushasya, Purushabhyam, Purushanam; "the place where," Purushé, Purushayôs, Purushanam; "the calling case," Hi Purusha, Hi Purushau, Hi Purushah.

I rom these one or two examples, other cases may be understood, it would be difficult to make a full statement of particulars

The Master of the Law thoroughly investigated the language (teords and phrases), and by talking with those men on the subject of the "pure writings," he advanced excellently in his knowledge. Thus he penetrated, and examined completely, all the collection (of Buddhist books), and also studied the sacred books of the Bunlimans. during five years.

Trom this place he again went to the country of Hiranyaparvata, by the way he came to the Ka-po-thh Sanghartma (the Ka-pottha convent). Two or three h to the south of this is a solitary hill, its steep and rugged sides and lofty leaks, its bushy trees and huxurant verdure, its fountains of pure and elear water, and its sluming flowers exhaling their perfume, have made this spot much renowned, it is covered with speed buildings, all of which exhibit many and various spiritual produces. In the middle of an open space is a Vihara in which is a sandal-wood figure of the Bödhisattva Avalökites ara, its appearance is divine and truly worshapful. There are many tens of men who for seven or fourteen days containe without food or druk, butting un their pracers continue without food or drink, putting up their prayers and entreaties (in the presence of this figure) Those and entreaties (in the presence of this figure) Those whose minds are most sincere, forthwith behold the Bödhisattvi with all its characteristic marks, glorious and resplendent, come forth from the sandal-wood figure, and grenously speak with those men concerning the subject of their prayers. There me very many men who have thus beheld the Bödlisattva, and on this account the worshippers have increased in number. The persons (congregation) that minister in religious matters at this shrine, fearing that the crowds who come to worship might pollute the sacred figure, have erected all round it, at a distance of seven paces, a strong wooden balustrade pointed with iron, so that all who come to worship must stand outside the rails. Not being able to come nearer to the image, they cast from the distance the flowers which they bring as offerings; those who succeed in making the flowers rest on the hands of the figure, or hang from its arms, are considered very lucky, and will get their prayers answered. Master of the Law wishing to go to put up his request, bought every kind of flower, and stringing them into garlands, he went to the place of the image. Having in the greatest sincerity paid his worship and offered his praises—he fell down on his hands and knees towards the image and put up these three vows:-

1 st. Would that I, having finished mystudies, may return in peace and quiet to my own country without accident: if so, may the flowers alight on the hands of the venerable one!

2nd. Would that, in return for the merit and wisdom I am aiming to acquire, I may be born in the Tusita courts, and be permitted there to worship Mâitreya Bôdhisattva: if so, may the flowers hang on both the arms of the venerable one!

3rd. The holy writings say that there is a portion of creatures born in the world, who are without "the nature of Buddha." Hiuen-Tsiang in his ignorance knows not what is his case. But if he has the nature of Buddha, and so by preparatory conduct may at last reach perfection as a Buddha, then let the flowers hang suspended from the neck of the venerable one!

Having thus spoken he flung the garlands from the distance, and they each alighted according to his vow.

Having thus accomplished what he sought, he was overpowered with joy, and those who were worshipping by his side, and the guardians of the Vihâra, having seen what had occurred, clapped their hands and stamped their feet, as they said "It is a mirale! hercifter, if you arrive at Perfect Wisdom, remember the history of this day, and first come to save us"

Going on gradually from this spot he came to the country of Hiranya. There are ten mounsteries and about 4000 priests in this kingdom, the priests mostly study the Little Vchiele and belong to the school of the Sariastivadius.

Recently there was a frontier king who deposed the ruler of this country, and bestoned the capital on the priests, in it, inorcover, he built two convents, each containing 1000 priests. There are two cument brothers here one called Tath's attained the other Kish'attsintha, both belouging to the Savastakhin school. Here the Master stopped one year and read the Vil h'ish't and the Nyhya-anus'ara, Sistras, and others.

To the south of the capital is a Stûpa, here Buddha in old days preached for three mouths for the good of Decas and men. By the side of it are traces where the past Buddhas walked to and fro. On the western borders of this country, south of the river Ganges, is a little solitary hill. Here Buddha in old days rested in actient for three months, and subdued the Yaksha Vakula.

South east of the hill, under a steep precipice, is a great rock on which are traces of Buddha as he sat on it They are deep in the rock an inch or more, in length 5 feet 2 inches in breidth 4 feet 1 inch

There is also a depression in the rock of about an inch where Buddha placed his water jur It resembles the eight pefals of a flower

To the south of this country all is wristo and forest There are great elephants there large in size and of great height.

BOOK IV.

Beginning at Champa and ending with an Account of the Invitation of the King of Kâmarûpa.

FROM this place, following the southern bank of the Ganges in an eastward direction 300 li or so, we come to the kingdom of Champâ. There are here some ten Sanghârâmas, with about 300 priests, who study (practise) the Little Vehicle.

The city walls are of brick, and several chang in height. The ditch round the town is deep and large, so that the place is exceedingly strong.

Formerly, at the beginning of the kalpa, men dwelt in caves. Afterwards, a divine maiden coming down, as she walked beside the Ganges, bathed herself therein. The divine influence of the river affecting her person, she bore four sons, between whom she divided the whole of Jambudvipa. They then traced out the limits of their territory and built cities. This was the capital city of one of the sons.

Many tens of yôjanas from the southern frontiers of this country, there are great mountain forests, thick and wild, embracing a space of 200 li and more. Here are many hundred wild elephants who roam in herds. Hence the elephant army of Hiranya and Champâ is very numerous. Every now and again they send elephant masters to go round and catch them. In these countries they keep them for drawing carriages (or, riding). Wolves, the rhinoceros, and black leopards are abundant, so men dare not go there.

¹ Such "black leopards" threatened Fa-hien on his ascent of the hien indeed calls them lions, but we

There is a tradition here of the following hand I ormerly, before Buddha came into the world, there was a certain cowherd tending reveral hundred heads of cittle. As he drave them, they came into this forest, when a c riam ox straved from the herd by itself alone. and was thus continually away in some unknown place lowards evening its custom was to return, and on to ming the herd it sumed to be of a radiant colour. very remarkable for its beauty, and its followings were different from all the others. The rest of the herd always seemed to be afrail of it, and would not venture to come near it. This happined for several days. The cowh rd, astonished at the circumstance, set a private watch, and at the moment when the ox d parted on its wander, he followed and watched it then he saw it enter a stone door (or a hele in a rock) The man also followed him and entered. After going on about four or five by along a valley suddouly there was a great light and a forest park appeared sparkling with brillings, the flowers were numerous and varied, the blossoms and fruit were all shinns like flame, duzling the eye, and contrary to anything in ordinary lıfa

He now saw the or at a certain place browsing on a herb The herb was of a vellow colour, and highly scented, and such as the man had never seen in the world The fruit on the trees were yellow and red, like gold, arounatic, and very large He plucked one of them, but although his heart had coveted its possession, he had not courage to taste it. After a little while the ox went out and the man also followed Scarcely had he got out of the hole in the rock, when in the very passage an evil demon suntched away the front and Popt it On this the cowherd consulted a all know the Chueso idea of a or black ion referred to by Chil li : —to which i leel Sung hun ders sub v sho r lers i) creis to sever a sha i lis great doctor, and described to him the shape of the fruit. The doctor said: "You must not eat it at once, but by the use of some stratagem, having taken one, manage to get out, and bring it to me."

On the second day, again following the ox, he entered, and forthwith plucked one of the fruit, and concealing it in his bosom, proceeded to return. The demon again met him, to take the fruit away. The man then took the fruit and put it in his mouth. The demon forthwith seized him by the throat; but the man managed to swallow the fruit. Directly it had entered his inside, his whole body began to swell enormously. His head indeed was outside the entrance, but the rest of his body was still within the cavern, so that he could not drag it through the hole.

After this his relations began to search for him, and at length, seeing him thus changed in form, they were very much frightened. But on going to him, he was still able to speak a few words about his misfortune. The friends then returned, and bringing a number of other persons with them, they tried by force of main strength to get him out from where he was fixed. But they were not able to move him.

The king of the country hearing of the circumstance, himself went to see the man; and fearing some future calamity, he sent some persons to dig him out; but even so they could not move him.

Months and years having elapsed, the man was gradually changed into stone, but he still kept his human form.

After this, again, there was a king knowing that it was a fairy fruit that caused the change, addressed his ministers and said: "That man's body was changed by virtue of a medicinal herb, then his body must partake of this medicinal quality; and although apparently he is only a stone, nevertheless his substance must contain in it something spiritual and divine. You must send men with axes and chies to separate some few fragments from the rock and then bring them to me"

The ministers in obedience to the kings orders desputched inister workinen to the place and thomselves accompanied them. During ten days they worked with clinical and axes, but were not able to get so much as a frament of the rock. It is still visible

I rom this, 50m2 eastward 400 h er so we come to the lingdom of Ki shie-ho lie lo (Kapp, htr.)

Here also lie examined and reverenced the sacred traces. There are six or seven Singhfridmas with about 300 pricats Going east from this and crossing the Ganges, after about 600 h we come to Pana-fa-tan na (Pundra varilina). Here again he paid reverence to this secret traces. There are about twelve Sanghananas here and 3000 priests, belonging to the Small and Great Vehiele.

Twenty it or so to the west of the capital is the Po-chi-sha! Singlifiana. The towers and indeones are lofty and grand. There are about 700 priests. By the side of it is a stipa, built by Asoka right. Here Tathfarta formerly dwelt for three months preceding the Law. The stipa frequently emits a shining light, moreover there are traces where the four past Buddhas walked up and down.

By the side of it there is a Vihara, in which is a figure of Avalókitestara Bödhisattia. Whoever prays here with perfect sincerity, is always auswered

Genny south cost from this 900 h or se, we come to the country of Kie lo na su-fa la na (Karnasuvarna)

There are about ten Sungha amas here and 300 priests, they study the Lattle Vehicle belenging to the Sammatiya school

Besides these there are two Sangharamas where those not use either butter or milk—this is the traditional teaching of Devadatta 2

By the side of the capital is the Singharama called

¹ For po clipo vile lecords li 195 n 23
2 lide Records ii ~01 n 39

Ki-to-mo-chi (red mud: the Si-yn-ki gives Lo-to-wei-chi, Raktaviți). In old days before this country had heard of the law of Buddha, then a Shaman of South India in his wanderings came here, and having overcome in argument a heretic who wore round his person some copper sheets, on that account the king of the country established this convent.¹

By the side of it is a stupa built by Asôka-raja: here Buddha in old times preached for seven days.

Going from this sonth-east we come to the country of Samatata, whose frontiers border on the great sea. The climate is in consequence soft and agreeable. There are about twenty Sangharamas here, with 3000 priests. They affect the teaching of the Sthavira 2 school. The heretics also who worship the spirits of heaven are numerous.

Going not far out of the city is a stûpa built by Aśôka-râja; this is the place where in old times Buddha preached the law in favour of Devas and men for seven days.

Again going from this a short distance is a Sangharama in which is a green-jade figure of Buddha, about eight feet high; its characteristic marks are beautiful and imposing. It exhales constantly of itself a delicious perfume, which fills the temple court like that of opening flowers wafted from far. From time to time it emits a heaven-like shining light of the five different colours. Every one seeing or hearing of this wonder, is deeply affected in his religious consciousness.

Going from this north-east along the borders of the sea, across mountains and valleys we come to the country of Chi-li-t'sa-ta-lo (Śrîkshetra); still going south-east, in a bay of the sea, is the country of Kâmalânkâ (Pegu); east of this is the country of Dvârapati (Sandoway); east of this is the country of Iśânapura; east of this is the country of Mahachumpi (Snam also called Lin-I), west of this is the country of Yen-mo-lo (Yamarája, but probably a mistake for Yen-mo-na-chau, the country of the Yavanas)! These six kingdoms are bordered by mountains and the deep sea Although Hinen-Tsiang did not enter their territory, he was yet able to gun knowledge of the customs and manners (of the people)

¹ Records, ii. p. 202.

² Not, as Julien says, the Sarvastivadas.

Going from this country of Sumitata in a westerly direction about 900 lt, we come to the kingdom of Tamralipti, which lies along a biy of the sea. There are some ten Sangharamis here, and a congregation of about 1000 priests

By the side of the city is a Staps, about 200 feet high, which was built by Asoka-raja, by the side of it are traces where the four past Buddhas walked to and fro

At this time the Master heard that in the middle of the ocean there was a country called Simhala, 2 it was distinguished for its learned doctors belonging to the Sthivira school, and also for those able to explain the Yona-sastra.

After a voyago of 700 yojanas, it was possible to reach that country.

On herring about this he inquired of a priest of South India, who, in consultation, told him as follows: 'Those who go to the Stathala country aught not to go by the ser route, during which they will have to encounter the dangers of bad weather (winds), the Yakshas, and rolling wries, you ought rather to go from the south-east point of South India, from which it is a three days' voyage. For although in travelling you may have to scale mountains and priss through villeys, yet you are safe. Moreover, you will thus be able to visit Orissa and other countries, and observe the sacred traces

¹ Vide Records de, is p 200 The lion taking country -Ch. Ed

The Master of the Law immediately set out in a south-westerly direction towards Orissa (Uḍa). There are here about 100 Sanghârâmas, and 10,000 priests or so. They study the Great Vehicle. Moreover, there are heretics who worship the powers of heaven, living in mixed society with the others. There are about ten Stûpas, all of which were built by Aśôka; they exhibit spiritual indications.

The south-eastern frontiers of the country border on the great sea. There is a town called Chi-li-ta-lo (Charitra). This is a rendezvous for merchants who embark on the sea, and for others from distant places who travel here and there.

At a distance of 20,000 li south,² is the country of Simhala. Every night when the sky is clear and without clouds, can be seen at a great distance the glittering rays of the precious gem placed on the top of the Stûpa of the tooth of Buddha; its appearance is like that of a shining star in the midst of space.

From this, going south-west and passing through a vast forest about 1200 li, we come to the country of Kong-u-t'o (Konyôdha, Ganjam?).

From this, going south-west 1400 or 1500 li through a wild forest, we come to the Kie-ling-kia country (Kalinga). There are about ten Sanghârâmas here, occupied by some 500 priests, who study the Law according to the Sthavira school. Formerly the population of this country was very dense, but on account of some trouble with a Rishi possessed of the five supernatural powers, who being angry, imprecated ruin and destruction on the kingdom, the population, young and old, perished; afterwards, people from other places gradually migrated here, but even now the population is sparse.

Going north-west from this about 1800 li, we come to Southern Kôsala. The king is of the Kshattriya

¹ Or, Udra: vide Records. ii. 204.

² Julien gives 2000.

In this country there was a Brahman who was skilled in explaining the treatise called In-ming; the Master of the Law remained here a month and some days and read (with him?) the Tsah-liang-lun.

From this, tending southwards, he passed through a great forest, and going some 900 li south-east, he came to the kingdom of Andhra.

By the side of the capital is a large Sanghârâma with richly ornamented beams, extensive courts, and its whole appearance venerable and majestic. Before it is a stone stûpa several hundred feet high which was constructed by the Arhat Achala.

South-west of the Sangharama, about twenty li, is an isolated hill on the top of which is a stone stapa; here the Bodhisattva Ch'in-na (Jina? or was his name Yuvana jana?) composed the Śastra In-ming (Hetuvidya?).

Going about 1000 li to the south of this we come to the kingdom of Dhanakaṭaka. To the east of the capital resting against a mountain is a Saṅghārāma called Pûrvaśilâ. To the west of the capital resting against a mountain is a Saṅghārāma called Avaraśilâ.¹ A former king of this country founded these for Buddha's sake; he thoroughly investigated the rules and patterns of Tahia² (for constructing such buildings). The woods and fountains, flourishing and charming, the spirits of heaven defending and protecting, caused both wise men and holy men, to reside here. In the middle of the 1000 years after Buddha's Nirvāṇa, there were ever laymen and clerics coming here together to keep their religious rest. The

With respect to the terms Pūrvašilā and Avarašilā, as denoting two minor schools of the Mahāsanighika sect, vide my Travels of Buddhist Pilgrims, p. 143, n.

¹ I can only surmise that the expression "resting against a mountain" means, that the Sangharama was hewn out of the mountain side: but vide Records, &c., ii. 221 and notes.

With respect to the terms Parvasila

² Ta-Hia is constantly used by Taou-Sün as equivalent to North India, or, that part of North-west India, conquered by the Yue-ti. Mr. Kingsmill restores Ta-hia to Tocharia; which may be correct, but is vague. I believe the reference to the text is to the Stûpas erected in North-West India, by the Indo-Scythians (so called).

serson of rest being past, all who were Arhats would mount into spice and depart. Aft r the 1000 years, both lavmen and fioly men haed tog ther fere but for 100 years or so the Mountain Spiret changing itself (into various shapes) has caused great amiogrance, and the religious people (those practising religion) have all leen so alarmed that they no fonger come or co Hence the place is now entirely waste and desert, without citle r priest or novice

Not far to the south of the capital is a great stone mountain, this is where the Master of Sistras Blilianiveka rests in the pulace of the Asurus awaiting the time when Maitrey's Bodhisattia shall reach perfect wisdom. and shall then explain some difficulties in his way

The Master of the Law, whilst in this country, met with two priests the first named Subhuti, the second Sarva both of them emment for explanning the Tripital's according to the Mahasangluka school

The Moster of the Law on this account remained there several months studying the Milliblidharma and other sistras according to the Mahasan luka school 1 likes also studied the various fistres of the Great Vehicle under the direction of the Master of the Law And so becoming bound together in mind they all went in company to pay reverence to the sacred traces of their religion

Going from this about 1000 ls to the south we como to the kingdom of Chulya

South east of the capital is n stupa built by Asoka raja This is the spot where in old days Buddha, when in this district exhibited great spiritual prodigies and overcume the heretics, preaching the I aw for the conversion of Devas and men.

To the west of the capital is an old Sanghârâma; this is the place where the Dêva Bôdhisattva discussed with the Arhat Uttara. After the seventh round of questions the Arhat gave no further answer; but by the exercise of his supernatural faculties, he passed into the Tuśita heaven, and there asked Mâitreya Bôdhisattva respecting his difficulties. The Bôdhisattva gave him the explanations required, and then, taking advantage of the occasion, addressed him thus: "That Deva, having a long accumulated store of merit, will, during this Bhadra Kalpa, perfect himself in the highest wisdom. You must not treat him lightly." Having returned to the spot he now undertook to explain the former difficulties. The Deva said: "This is the reasoning of Mâitreya Bôdhisattva and not your own, and your wisdom is derived from him."

The Arhat, filled with confusion, confessed his inferiority, and paying him reverence left the place.

Going south from this through a great forest some 1500 or 1600 li, we come to the kingdom of Dravida; the chief capital of this kingdom is named Kânchîpura; this was the birthplace of Dharmapâla Bôdhisattva. He was the son of a great minister of this kingdom. As a child he exhibited wonderful wisdom. After he had assumed the virile cap, the king, enamoured by his talent, wished to give him a princess of his family in marriage. The Bôdhisattva, who had long disciplined himself to reject sensual pleasures, had no mind to incur the pollutions of love; on the evening preceding the consumnation of the marriage, he was overcome with feelings of grief and despondency, and betook himself to an image of Buddha before which he offered up his prayers and besought his protection and deliverance from his present difficulties, and this he did with all his heart.

There was a great king of the spirits who (in consequence) transported him by his power several hundred li from the city. He deposited him in a mountain convent, in the middle of the hall of Buddha. The priests coming in and seeing lim there, agreed together that he was a thref. The Bödhisattva himself iclated his adventure, on which his auditors were filled with astemishment and could not but admire his high resolve. He now entered the religious life, and applied himself thereafter with all his powers to the practice of the true Law. In consequence he was able to penetrate the menning of all the schools, and to exercise himself in the art of religious composition. He drow up the following works the Sabdavidyd-samyukla-kdstra, in 25,000 slokas, a commentary on the Satasastra-vapulyam, on the Vadyamālra-siddhi; and on the Niyāya ārāra tāraha sāstra—altogether several tens of books very extended and highly significant of his eniment virtue and great talent. There is, moreover, a personal narrativo of his history

The city of Kanchipura is situated on the mouth (bay) of the southern sea of India, looking towards the kingdom of Sunials, distant from it three days' voyage

In the interval (before the Master of the Law left this kingdom) the king of Suhhala died the country was at that time suffering from famine and in a state of disorder, there were two ominent priests there called Bôdhimêgheśvara and Abhavadanshtra

These two with 300 other priests, coming to India, arrived at Kanchipura.

The Master of the Law, having obtained an interview with them, asked them as follows "It is reported that the chief priests of your kingdom are able to explain the Tripitaka according to the Sthavira school, and also the Yôga-śâstra I am anxious to go there and study these books. May I ask why you have come to this place?" In reply, they said "The king of our country is dead and the people are suffering from famine, without any resource for help. We heard that Jambudvipa possessed abundance of food and was at peace and settled This, too, is the place of Buddha's birth, and full of sacred traces of his presence: for this reason we have come. Moreover, among the members of our school who know the Law there are none who excel ourselves as to age and position; if you have any doubts therefore, let us, according to your will, speak together about these things."

The Master of the Law then gave examples of choice passages of the Yoga-śástra, both long and short sections, but they were not able to explain any of them as Śîlabhadra did.¹

It is reported that 3000 li or so from the frontiers of this kingdom is the country of Malakûta; as it borders on the sea-coast it is exceedingly abundant in different gems.

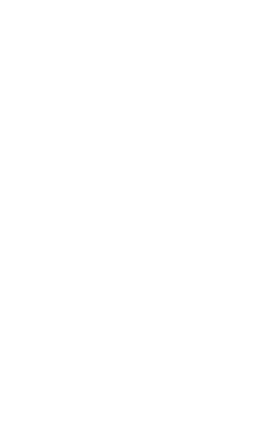

To the east of its chief town is a stûpa built by Aśôka-râja. This is the spot where in old days Tathâgata preached the Law and exhibited many spiritual changes, for the conversion of an innumerable company of persons.

To the south of this kingdom bordering on the sea is Malayagiri, with its precipices and ravines, towering upwards and lying deep. Here is found the white sandal-scented tree, the Chandanêva tree. This tree is like the white poplar. Its substance being of a cold nature, many kinds of snakes frequent the trees during summer, but in the winter they conceal themselves in the ground. Thus this kind of sandal tree is distinguished.

Again there is the Karpûra scented tree. It is like the pine in its trunk, but leaves different, as also its blossoms and fruit. When the tree is cut down and full of sap, it has no scent, but when it has been cut down and dry, then dividing it through the middle there is found the scented portion, in appearance like mother of pearl and of the colour of congealed snow. This is what is called Dragon-brain scent (camphor).

Again, it is reported that on the north-east by the

 $^{^1}$ The Yoga system was probably unknown, or slightly known, in Ceylon It was a late development of Buddhism.

and destroyed many women and men of the villages, as he roamed to and fro.

The people informed the king of these facts, and he collected the four kinds of troops, the most courageous he had, to surround (the lion) and kill him with their arrows. The lion having observed this, uttered the most dreadful roars, and frightened both men and horses, so no one dared to attack him.

So many days passed without any result. The king then issued another proclamation promising a hundred thousand gold pieces to any one who could slay the lion.

Then the son spake to his mother thus: "The cold and want we suffer are sad calamities. I will respond to the invitation of the king—what think you?"

The mother said: "It is impossible; for although he is a beast, yet he is your father, and if you should kill him, how can you claim the name of a man?"

The son said: "Unless I follow out my plan he will certainly not go away: and whilst he is pursuing and following us he may enter the village, and then some morning the king will know of our return, and our death will not be long deferred. What then? The lion by his fury is a source of disaster, and it will befall us also. How can it be that for the sake of one, many should suffer loss? I have thought over it again and again; it ought not to be so, I must comply with the request."

So he went out (to attack the lion)! The lion when he saw him was subdued in manner, and was full of joy: he cast off all evil designs of slaughter. The son taking a knife cut his throat and rent his belly. Although agonised with suffering the lion still retained his love and deep affection, and bore his pain patiently and never moved till he died.

The king hearing of the lion's death, was rejoiced, but on account of the strangeness of the circumstances, he inquired as to the cause (of the son's conduct). At that he presentabled, I is being her lay present, he may between at her feton a conferred of the troth.

The limit leads of the extra of the Polar who except one from of a heart could have lad so he a heart Although I will not recolor from my first produce as to the cutail; yet as you have so can you well to be not an or lay of the course of a point legger may no longer the arm in the course.

He then dire to his error extrates to give him abindance of pild and precoin jewels, and afterwarts to drive him leto beneale out.

Are alongly they equipped two rlope, in which they placed a quantity of pall and trevens of all routs, and positions. Having a nutried them? to the inid occumitary than let their dust at the nearly of the tube. The slope mixing; the young man, after beating all at a long while, arrived at Poschu, where, seeing the abordance of its rire productions, he resched to stay.

Afterwards increhantmen with their family connections came there in search of jewels, and test, up their abode in his neighbourhood. On this be killed the merchants and detained their wises and daughters. Thus the chilinen and grandclablers increased through many penerations, and when the population became by degrees very numerous, they dected a ruler and ministers, and secure their distant ancestor had captured and slain the loan they called their country (by its name, Simbala)

The ship which carried the garl, after besting about at sea, came to the western parts of Persia. Palling into the hands of demons who dwell there, she gave birth to a number of daughters, and this is now the country of the Western women.

But it is also said that Subbala is the name of a merchant's son, who by his rare wisdom escaped from the munderous purpose of the Baksha demons, and alterwards,

³ That is, the brother and slater, being elected king, came to this Po-chu island and slew the Rakshas, and established his capital in the country. Hence the name, as narrated in the Si-yu-ki.¹

This kingdom in former days was without the law of Buddha. One hundred years after the Nirvana of Tathagata, the younger brother of Asôka-raja, Mahêndra by name, giving up and rejecting the pleasures of life, taking with him four 2 Sramanas, forthwith travelling here and there through space, came to convert this country. In order to exhibit and exalt the teaching of Buddha, he manifested his miraculous powers. people of the country, full of faith and admiration, founded a Sangharama. At present there are some hundred such foundations, with 10,000 priests. follow the teaching of the Great Vehicle, and belong to the school of the Sthaviras. The lay disciples are grave and respectful, following the directions of the moral code with intelligence and zeal, stimulating one another to mutual diligence.

By the side of the king's palace is the Viliâra of Buddha's tooth, several hundred feet high. It is decorated with every kind of precious substance. On the top of it is erected a signal staff, which is surmounted by a great ruby (Padmarâga jewel), and fixed to the tce.³ Its brilliant sparkling lights up the heaven, and on a clear and cloudless night it can be seen by those who are even 10,000 li distant.

By the side of this is another Vihâra decorated with every kind of gem. Within this building is a golden statue made by a former king of the country, in the tiara of which is a precious gem of incalculable value. In after times there was a man who wished to steal this jewel. The place, however, was so well guarded and watched that he could not get inside. He then excavated Records, ii. 240.

 Dîpavainsa, xii. § 25.
 The Khettiya, or graduated spire.

a subterraneou possige and re-entered the building a substrained presign and 19 the fet for mining. When he was just group to take the gent the hance gradually grow higher, so that the indistribution not look to so her. Then as he went away, he said "Tall lyans, when he practiced the distipline of a 19-dissatts a in fermer days, did not gradge to sacrifice his life for the rate of all firsh, nor did he sample to gave up his country or his (nation) city—how comes it then that he is now nighted in his gafts? We fear that these reports about Lim are not true," The image, on this, bent himself down and gwethe jewel. The thief having taken it, went forth and proposed to sell it. Itut the men who saw it and recognised it, reused the robber and brought him to the ling. Tre king demanded how he got the gem. replied, Bud the hunself give it me-and be related the whole transaction The king on his part, seeing the head of the linage bent downwards, perceived that the event or the image tent downwards, perceived that the event was spiritual and sacred, and so his faith was greatly despend, and he give the robber all kinds of gens and precious substances in exchange for the (seden) jewel. Then taking it back he replaced it on the trans of the image, and there it still is.

At the conth-east corner of the country is Lafiklarri. Many dávas and associates of evil spirits dwell here. Tathagita in old time delivered the Lafiklavatára Sátra on this mountain.

To the south of the country, many thousand li across the ocean, is the island called Nacklea. The men of thes island are small of stature, about three feet in height; they have the bodies of men, but with beaks like birds. They have no grain-food, but live on cocoa-nuts.

They have the organi-food, but live on cocoa-nuts.

This country 1 being too remote, and separated by an expanse of sea, the Master was not able to visit it himself, but has related in detail all that he heard from men's mouths.

From Drâvida he went north-west in company with about seventy priests from Simhala, and visited the sacred traces for the purpose of reverent observation.

After going about 2000 li, we come to Kin-na-po-lo¹ [Kongkaṇapura]. There are about 100 Sanngharamas here, and 10,000 priests belonging both to the Great and Little Vehicle. The heretics who practise the worship of Dêvas are also very numerous.

By the side of the royal palace precincts is a large Sangharama with about 300 resident priests, all of them greatly reverenced for their literary talents. In this Vihara is a precious head-dress 2 of the Prince Siddhartha about two feet high; it is preserved in a richly adorned casket. Every religious fast day it is taken out and placed on a high pedestal; those who offer it sincerest reverence, frequently see it lit up with radiance.

In a Sangharama by the side of the city is a Vihara in which is a carved sandal-wood figure of Maîtreya Bôdhisattva, about ten feet high. This, also, frequently glistens with radiance. It is said that twenty million Arhats carved the image.

To the north of the city is a forest of Talas trees, about thirty li in circuit. The leaves of this tree are long, and of a shining appearance. The people of these countries use them for writing on,³ and they are highly valued.

From this, going north-west, we pass through a great forest which is infested with savage animals and desert; after 2400 or 2500 li, we come to the kingdom of Mahârâshtra. The people of this country despise death, and highly esteem right conduct.

The king is of the Kshattriya caste. He is fond of military affairs, and boasts of his arms. In this country, therefore, the troops and cavalry are carefully equipped, and the rules of wrifine thoma, bly understood and of errod. Whenever a central teste patched on a warlike existation, although he is defeated and his array destroyed, he is not himrelf subjected to bodily pumeliment, only he has to exchange his soldier's diess for that of a woman, much to his shan,e and chazrin. So, many times, they men unt themselves to death to avoid such the race. The king always supports reveral thousand men of valour, and reveral hundred savage elephants. When these are drawn up in buttle array, then they give them intexicating spirits to drink, till they are exercovered with it - and then at a given signal, when in this condition, they excite them to rush against (the energy) This fees are thus without fail put to flight. It lying on these advantages, he holds in contempt all the frentier towers that contend with him for the mastery.

¹ For, Kong-kin-na-po-lo.
² Julien gives "the statue of the Prince;" but it is not so in the text.

3 Hence it is sometimes called the Pci-to, i.e. the leaf (patra) tree.

Sill his a rija, borsting of his skill and the invariable success of his generals, tilled with confidence himself, marched at the head of his troops to contend with this prince—but he was unable to prevail or subjugate him.¹

There are about 100 Sufghirdman here, and 5000 priests, who belong to the Great and Lattle Vehicle promiseuously. There are also followers of the heretics who worship the Dévas, and cover themselves with askes.

Within and outside the capital there are five Stupes, all of them several hundred fact (in height). These wife built by Acka-raja, as mementos of the places where the four past Buddhas had walked to and fro

From this hingdom, going north-west a thousand ls or so, crossing the river Ni-mo-to (Narmmadd), we come to the kingdom of Po-lu-kie-chen-po (Baroche)

From this, going north-west about 2000 h, we come to the country of Mo-la-p'o (Mâlava).1 The people of this country in their manner are polished and agreeable. They exceedingly love the fine arts. In all the five Indies, Mâlava on the south-west, and Magadha on the north-east alone have the renown of loving the study of literature, of honouring virtue (or goodness), and of polite language and finished conversation.

1 Vide Records, vol. if p. 256 The Prince's name was Pulakesh.

There are about 100 Sangharamas in this country, with 20,000 priests who study the Small Vehicle and belong to the Sammativa school. There are also heretics who cover themselves with aslies and worship the host of Dêvas. Tradition says: Sixty years before this there was a king called Śilâditya,2 of high talent and singular learning. He was humane, affectionate, generous, and sweetly attached to his people. He was from the first supremely reverent to the doctrine of the three precious ones; and from the time he became king to his death no improper word had proceeded from his mouth, nor had his face ever flushed with passion.

His thoughts towards his ministers and his wives were always tender, nor would he even injure a fly or an ant. He caused the water given to his horses and elephants first to be strained and then to be given them, lest he should destroy the life of a water insect. He impressed on the chief people of the kingdom to avoid taking life, and hence the beasts of the desert became attached to men, and the wolves ceased to be injurious. All the occupants within his borders were quiet, and the indications of good fortune daily presented themselves. He constructed temporary residences on the largest and grandest scale, and made figures of the seven Buddhas. He also convoked the assembly called "Môksha (Mahaparishad)."

Thus for fifty years he continued on the throne carrying out these most excellent works without cessation;

Vide Records, ii. 200.
 This was Siladitya of Ujjain, Records, i. 108, n. 91.

and he thus enleared huntelf to his people, and his memory is still revered.

Twenty li or to to the north-west of the causal by the side of Bellimmanner (the city of the Botherans) is a deep ditch; this is the place where a great arrogant Bridging when he abused the Great Vehicle with a view to its destruction, went down alive ruto hell, as is telated in the Sa-va Is1

From this, going north-west 2400 or 2500 lt, we come to the Lingdom of O-A'a h (Atah) This district produces the Maction tree, the leases of which are like the c of the peoper-tree of Szichnen. It also produces the Humila (Tanzra (July) serlame tree, the leaves of which are like those of the Thangeli (the mountain ash),

From this, going north-west three days, we come to the Ling low of K're Ch'a About 1000 h to the north of this we come to the kingdom of Fa-la-m (Vallabli). There are about too Saughtiamas here, and 6000 priests who study the Little Vehicle, according to the Summativa school.

Tathagata when alive frequently sejourned in this country. Aloka-raja erected distinguishing momentos in all the places where Buddha stopped. The present king belongs to the Kshuttriya caste; he is son-in-law (nu sai) of Silahtya rata of the kmedom of Kanyakubia: his name is Dhruvabhaja He is of a quick and impulsive nature, and his manners are heavy and dull, but yet he esteems virtue and advances learning. He is faithfully attached to the three treasures, and every year he assembles a great gathering and for seven days he entertains priests from all countries and bestons on them

Text It is translated "Royal hel" this name is eq i lained in the Si ak by the symbols for "ever intellated" or "armed" = Dhruva helmetd or "armed" = Dhruva helmetd " by "Armed" = Dhruva helmetd " by "Armed" = Dhruva helmetd " by "Yele Records, il. 269, n, 73 food of the best description, choice jewels, bedding and clothes, with varieties of medicaments and other things of different kinds.

From this, going north-west about 700 li, we come to the country of Anandapura.

Again, going 500 li or so to the north-west, we come to the kingdom of La-su-c'ha (for Su-la-c'ha), (Surashtra).

From this, going north-east 1800 li, we come to the country of Kiu-che-lo (Gurjjara).

Again, going south-east 2800 li or so, we come to the country of U-che-yen-na (Ujjayanî). Not far from the capital is a stûpa; this is the spot where Asôka-râja constructed his (place of punishment called) Hell.¹

From this, going north-east about 1000 li, we come to the country of Chi-ki-to.

From this, going north-east 900 li or so, we come to the kingdom of Mahêsvarapura.

From this, going back in a westerly direction, we again come to the country of Suratha.

Going hence to the west we come to the kingdom of O-tin-p'o-chi-lo (Atyanabakêla). When Tathâgata was alive he repeatedly sojourned in this country, and Aśôka râja has raised stûpas on all the spots he visited (left sacred traces), all of which still exist.

From this, going west about 2000 li, we come to the country of Lang-kie-lo (Langala), which lies near the Great Sea, towards the country of the Western women.

From this, going north-west, we come to the country of Po-la-sse (Persia), which is not within the boundaries of India. It is said that this territory abounds in pearls and precious substances, in silken brocades and wool, sheep, horses, and camels. There are two or three Sanghârâmas here, with some hundred disciples, who study the Little Vehicle, according to the school of the $^{^{1}}$ But cf. p. 102. The story must have been carried from Magadha into Malava.

Surfernador. The Pitra of Silva Buddha is at pres at in the royal palace of this country. On the castern frontier is the city of Ha 110 (Or. 112) the north-west borders on the country of Po-lin. On the south-west, on an island, is the country of the Western women. There women live no mile children among them, but the country abounds with precious substances, it is tributary to Fo-lan. The king of Fo-lin every year sends men to collect with the women lost whatever male children are been, they do not tear them.

Again, going north-rast from the kingdom of Lingsla, about 700 h, we come to the Lingdon of Poto-shi lo (Putati) Here is a staps, several hundred feet high, which was built by A66k1-rin It contains relies which often emit a brilliant light. When Tothogata was formerly born as a Riski, he was slam here by the crucky of the king of the country.

From this, going north-east about 300 h, we come to the Lingdom of O-Im-ch's (Avanda). North-east of the capital, in a great forest, are the ruins of a Sangbailans. Buddha, when formerly hving in this place, permitted the Blokshus to wear Kill-full-to ! Cleather brots). There is a stupe built by Asoka raje, by the side of it is a vibara in which is a standing figure of Buddler, made of blue stone, which frequently emits a bribliant light.

South of this, about 800 paces in a large forest, there is a stup, which was built by Aboka-ray. Tathagata, in old days, was stopping on this spot, when, the night being cold, he wrapped himself up in three garments, one over the other. When the morning came, he gave permission to the Bhikshus to wear quilted garments.

Going frem this eastwards 700 li or so, we come to the country of Sin-tu (Sindh). This country produces gold, silver, calamine stone (t'au shih), oxen, sheep, camels, red salt, white salt, black salt, &c.

¹ Probably Ba(bylon)
2 Records, ii 280, n. 97.

[,] 护心被

This last kind of salt is used in different places for making medicines. Tathâgata when alive, frequently sojourned in this country; whatever sacred traces of his presence there are, Aśôka-râja has built stûpas on those spots as mementos. There are also here traces of the great Arhat Upagupta, who sojourned here whilst engaged in the conversion of men.

From this, going east 900 li or so, crossing the river to its eastern bank, we come to Mu-lo-san-po-la (Mûlas-thânapura or Multân, Si-yu-ki, ii. 274). The people sacrifice to the gods and worship U-fa-tsun (Âditya?),² that is, the Sun ³-God. His image is cast out of yellow gold, and adorned with every kind of precious stone. People from all neighbouring countries come here to offer their prayers. The flowery woods, the tanks and ponds, the tastefully arranged tiles, the surrounding steps, all these, when viewed as a pleasurable sight, cannot but inspire feelings of admiration.

From this, going north-east 700 li or so, we come to the kingdom of Po-fa-to-lo (Parvata). By the side of the capital is a great Sangharama, with about 100 priests, all of whom study the Great Vehicle. It was here Jinaputra, Master of Śastras, formerly composed the Yogacharya-bhûmi-śastra-karika. Here, also, the Master of Śastras, Bhadraruchi, and the Master of Śastras, Guṇaprabha, originally became disciples.

Because this country had two or three leading priests whose claims for learning might serve for guidance, the Master of the Law stopped here two years 5 and studied

可 for 酒

² I should think nather a Persian, than a Sanscrit word, is to be sought here.

³ The symbol in the text is doubtful. But I take it for "Jih," the sun

⁴ For, Po-lo-fa-to.
⁵ Julien has months.

the Muldbludharma-Cistra and the Saddharma-SumpAragraba-Cistra, and the PrasikshA-satya Listra, as received in the Sammatiya school

From this returning a aim by a south east! route to Magadha, the Master arrived at the Nalauda monaster. There he paid his respects to the priest called Ching-fi-tsong—fiter which he heard that to the west of this place about three journs there was a convent—called Filadaka, where lived a renowned priest called Praparbhaders, a native of 1 o-lopotit (Balapati I), who had embraced the religious life in the school of the Sarvastavadus.

This man had distinguished himself by his knowledge of the three Pitakas and of the Sabdavidy's and the Hetuvidy's fisters and others

The Master of the Law lawing remained here for two months closely questioned hum about matters on which he had doubts

Irom this he went again to the hill called Yashtavani, and stopped with a householder who was a intire of Suratha and a Kshattrija by easte—his name wis Jajasena, a writer of Sistras. As a youth he was given to study, and first under Birdraruchi Vastei of Sistras, he had studied the Hethridya-sistra, then under Sthatmatt Bödhisattva, he had studied the Suddividya sistra (and others) belonging to the Great and Lattle Vehicle. Again under Shabhadra, Master of the Law he had studied the Yoga fastra.

And then again, with respect to the numerous productions of secular (outside) writers the four Vedas, works on astronomy and geography, on the medicinal art, magic and arithmetic he had completely mastered these from beginning to end he had exhausted these inquiries root (leaf) and branch, he had studied all of them both within and without His acquirements (virtue) made him the admiration of the period for learned men, and honoured those distinguished as sages: hearing of this man's renown, he was much pleased, and sent messengers to invite him to come to his court, and nominated him "Kwo-sse" (Master of the Kingdom), and assigned for his support the revenue of twenty large towns. But the Master of Sastras declined to receive them.

Purmu arma rija lord of Magadha, had great respect

After the obsequies of Purnavarma, Śîlâditya râja also invited him to be "the Master (of the country)," and assigned him the revenue of eighty large towns of Orissa. But again the Master declined the offer. The king still urged him repeatedly to acquiesce, but he as firmly refused. Then addressing the king he said: "Jayasêna has heard, that he who receives the emoluments of the world (men), also is troubled with the concerns of life; but now my object is to teach the urgent character of the fetters of birth and death; how is it possible then to find leisure to acquaint myself with the concerns of the king?"

So saying, he respectfully bowed and went away, the king being unable to detain him.

From that time he has constantly lived on the mountain called Yashtivana, where he takes charge of disciples, teaching and leading them on to persevere, and expounding the books of Buddha. The number of laymen and priests (religious persons) who honour him as their Master is always a large one, amounting to several hundred.

The Master of the Law remained with him first and last for two years, and studied a treatise on the difficulties of the Vidyâ-matra-siddhi sâstra, the I-i-li-lun, the Shing-wu-wai-lun, the puh-chu-ni-pan-shih-i-yin-un-lun, the chwong-yan-king-lun; and he also asked explanations of passages in the Yôga and the Hetuvidyâ sâstras which yet caused him doubt.

When this was done he unexpectedly dreamt in the night and saw all the chambers and courts of the Nalanda monastery deserted and foul; mon over, there were nought but water buffdoes fastened in them, with no priests or followers. The Master of the Law entering through the Western gate of the hall of Balantya raya, beheld on the top of the four-storeyed paython a goldencoloured man, of a grave and imposing countenance, whilst a glorious light shone within the cutire abode His mind was overloyed, and he wished to ascend to the top, but he found no way to do so, he then be sought hum to rach down and lift him up-but he replied: "I am Mannieri Bodhisatta, jour Larma does not jet adout of (such a privileye)"—and then pointing to the outside of the convent, he and "Do you see that?" The Master of the Law looking in the direction indicated by his finger, saw a ficreo fire burning without the convent, and consuming to asker villages and towns. Then the golden figure said "You should return soon, for after ten years Siladitya ran will be dead," and India be laid waste and in rebellion, wieked men will slaughter one another: remember these words of mine!" After he had

The Master of the Law when he awoke, filled with pleasurable emotion, went to Jayasena and told him of his dream. Jayasena said "There is no rest in the entire world (the three worlds). it is quite possible it may be, as you have heard in your dream, but as you have received the intimation, the responsibility is yours. you must use your own expedient" From this may be gathered, that whatever good men (great students) do, all is watched over by Bôdhisattvas. When thinking of going from Iudia—then it was told to ² Silabhadra and he detained me When still delaying and not going back, then I was told of the fact of death, by way of exhortation to return. If my conduct were not in agreement with the holy mind (of the Bôdhisattva) how could this have happened?

finished, he disappeared

¹ Kwei tsz' chii = go from hero 2 For a full examination of this subject, rude Max Müller's India p 286. 3 p 146, Jul — Supra, p 108,

So towards the end of the Yung Hwei¹ period (i.e. about 654-5, A.D.), Śilâditya râja died, and India was subjected to famine and desolation, as had been predicted. The imperial ambassador, Wang-ün-tsc, was at this time making ready to be a witness of these things.² It was now the beginning of the first month.

It is in this same month, according to the rules of the Western country, they bring forth from the Bôdhi convent (viz., at Gâya) the Śarîras of Buddha. Both laymen and priests from all countries come together to witness the spectacle, and to worship. The Master of the Law, therefore, with Jayasôna both went to see the relic-bones. These are both great and small. The large ones are like a round pearl, bright and glistening, and of a reddish-white colour. There are also flesh-relics, large as a bean, and in appearance shining red. An innumerable multitude of disciples offered incense and flowers; after ascribing praises and offering worship they take (the relics) back and place them in the Tower (stûpa).

At the end of the first watch of the night, Jayasêna and the Master of the Law were discoursing about the inequality as to size of the different Sarîras. Then Jayasêna said, "Your disciple has seen in different places sarîras (only) as large as rice grains, how happens it then that these are so large? Venerable sir! have you any doubts on this point?"

Hiuen-Tsiang replied, "I share your doubts in this matter."

After a little while the light of the lamps in the building was suddenly eclipsed, and within and without there was a supernatural illumination produced. On looking out they saw the relic-tower bright and effulgent as the sun, whilst from its summit proceeded a lambent

This period lasted to 656 A.D.
 That is, the embassy from China to India now being prepared.

flunc of five colours, reaching to the sky. Hence and carth were flooded with hi the moon and state were no longer seem and a subtle perfume seemed to breather through and fill the courts and the precincts

Then it was noised abroad, from one to the other, that the fariras were exhibiting a mighty miracle. All the inhibiting being a grizant of it, came to ether and again offered their abortion and spoke in require of the wonderful sight. By degrees the light grew less and less and when at the last moment it was about to die out, it seemed to energie the dome of the tower several times and then it was absorbed (as it seems) within (the tower). And now heaven and earth were again wrapped in dark nees, and the different stars once more appeared. All who witnessed this miracle were freed from doubts!

They then paid worship to the Bodhi tree, and also to the sacred vestiges, and eight days having passed they returned once more to the Nalanda monastery

At this time the Master of Sistras Silabhudra deputed the Master of the Law to expound to the congregation the Mahayina-samparigraha fistra and comments on the difficulties of the Yidyā matra siddhi fistra

At the same time an Chanent priest naned Simharasmi² had been explaining for the sake of the fraterinty (the four classes) the Prinyamila-fistra and the Sita-fistra, newly arranged, the object of which was to rofate the principles of the logs

The Master of the Law had, in the best of spirit, opposed the Prinjamila and Sata-Sastra, and approved of the Loga with the opinion that the illustrious (holy) men, who founded these doctume, each followed one thought, and were not initially at variance, or opposed, and if they cannot be quite reconciled he said, jet these are not contradictory, and the fault is with their successors but this cannot but the truth of the Law.

¹ It is currous to find from these accounts the prevalence of such 1 is ny copy in set part of an pious frands in Indicatit stime army, sudnots, a hon

From a feeling of pity for the narrow views of this doctor, the Master of the Law frequently went to question and to correct his opinions. But he was unable to induce him to reply. From this circumstance his disciples gradually left him, and attached themselves to the Master of the Law.

Hiuen-Tsiang aimed by the assertions of the Pranyamûla and Śata-śâstras simply to overthrow the conclusions of the Sañkhya, but said nothing about a self-derived or external nature, or the perfectly complete true nature (of Buddha)—but yet Simharasmi could not grasp the argument nor consent to its truth. He affirmed only the proposition "yih-tsai-wu-sho-tch," ("all things without attainment"),¹ and he affirmed that the conclusion of the Yôga in reference to the complete, perfect, and true (nature), &c., was an error, and this was the uniform position he took up in argument.

The Master of the Law, in order to reconcile the two doctrines,² affirming that they were not contradictory, composed a sastra which he called Hwwi-Tsung in 3000 slôkas. When finished he presented it to Śalabhadra and the great congregation. All spoke approvingly of it, and it is generally accepted for study (practice).

Simharasmi, filled with shame, forthwith left the convent and went to the Bôdhi monastery (at Gâya). There he privately requested a fellow-student of his, one Chandrasimha of Eastern India, to come with him and discuss these difficult points of doctrine, and so relieve him from his former disgrace. But when this man came he was faint-hearted and silent, and did not dare to say a word. Thus the fame of the Master of the Law increased greatly.

Before Simharasmi had departed Sîlâditya-râja had

¹ i.e. "that nothing is to be attained by effort;" this proposition is the opposite of yih-tsai-yeou-sho-teh.

² Viz., 1st, that there is nothing to be attained by effort; and 2nd, that we may attain the one true nature [by Yôga].

constructed a Vibira covered with Irres plates by the s he of the Milanda mounters, ab us a hundred feet in I talit. It was removed the male all c untrice

The line ofter teturning from the submention of Konyedler (Guipun I) cain to Oness. It price's of this country all e nly the Intie Veh ele, and do not blick in the Great Vehicle. They eas it is a system of the ' sly-flower" hereics, and was not delivered by Bulliha.

When they can the I m; after his arrival, they entered into converentien and end. We hear that the Ling has built ly the side of the Malanda convent a Vibira of brass, a work magnifecut and admirable. But why did not your majesty construct a Kay full's t mp c, or some other building of that s at?"

The ling answere! "What mean you by the e words of reproach?"

In reply, they said . The Monastery of Nalanda and its 'sky-flower's doctrine is not different from the Kunahka seet this is our meaning!

Before this a consecrated king of South India had a teacher, an old Brahman, whose name was Pranagupta, who was well served in the doctrine of the Sammatiya school. This man composed a treatise in 700 slol as namet the Great Vehicle Alf the teachers of the Little Vehicle were rejoiced therest and tal mg the book showed it to the king and said "This represents our doctrine is there a man of the other school that can upset one single word of it?"

The king said ' I have heard of the for, accompanied by the merdow rats, borsting he was able to contend with the lion, but as soon as he saw him, then his heart failed him and they were all scattered in a moment. You sire. have not set seen the priests of the Great Vehicle, and so you firmly maintain your foolish principles If you once

¹ The sky flower coeffine is fully botton was franch tiere. The doe only lined in the Surangruma Strettene is simply that all objective it was evil the above developed plenometer are only like sky flowers in the Volkarla monastery as this unreal and vanishing see them—affrighted, you will, I fear, then, be the same as that (fox).

Then they answered: "If there be any doubt on the king's part about the matter, why not assemble a conference and let there be a close investigation, as to right and wrong?"

The king said: "And what difficulty is there in this?"

So on that very day he sent a messenger with a letter to the Nâlanda convent to Sîlabhadra, the Master of the Law, surnamed "the treasure of the true doctrine," (Saddharma piṭaka?), in which he said: "Your servant, whilst progressing through Orissa, met some priests of the Little Vehicle who, hampered by contracted views, adhere to a sastra which abuses the principles of the Great Vehicle. They speak of the followers of that system as men of a different religion, and they wish to hold a controversy with you on this point. Now I know that in your convent there are eminent priests and exceedingly gifted, of different schools of learning, who will undoubtedly be able to overthrow them-so now, in answer to their challenge, I beg you to send four men of eminent ability, well acquainted with one and the other school, and also with the esoteric and exoteric doctrine, to the though he were n man of slender ubility and ordurary wisdom, would nevertheless be quite sufficient (to overcome them). Be not therefore anxious, venerable sirs! If he were to suff r defeat, he I nows that the priests of China from this time would have so rejustion!"

On this th y were all failed with joy

But Sill hive rips again sent a letter to this effect. There is no time chart pressure for the former request let them wait, and afterwards come here.

About this time there was a heretre of the 'Shun-si" seet (the L'hitiyas), who came to dispute (with the Milarda room's) and he wrote out forty threes and hing them up at the Temple gate 'If any one within can refinte these principles," his said, "I will then give my head as a proof of his victory"

Several days having passed without any response to this challenge, the Master of the Law sent an attendant (pure man) from within his quarters to go and pull down the writing (document), to tear it in pieces, and trimple it under foot

The Brahman in a great rigo asked him and said. "Who are you?"

He said "I am the servant of Mahayanadêva'

The Brahman, who had long heard of the faine of the Master, was abushed, and dare not go in to dispute with him

The Master of the Law therefore bade him come in and discuss the points. Then in the presence of Silabhadra he called on all the priests to be witnesses whilst he disputed with the Brahman. He then noticed in succession the various opinions of the different heretical schools and said. The Bhûtas, Nirgranthas, the Kûlahikas, and the Jithas, are all differently arrayed. The 10, Chudinkas, ascetics with matted lair. Cf. Litel Handbool and Epidangas.

47/48

Sankhyas and the Vâiseshikas 1 are mutually opposed. The Bhûtas cover themselves with cinders, and think this to be meritorious. Their skin of a livid white colour looking like a cat in the chimney corner. The Nirgranthas and their followers go without clothing, and so attract notice, making it a meritorious act to pull out their hair by violence; their skin dried up and their feet hard, and in appearance like the decayed wood on the The sect of the Kâpâlikas, with their river bank. chaplets of bones round their heads and necks, inhabiting holes and crevices of the rocks, like Yakshas who haunt the place of tombs. As for the Chingkias (Chudinkas), they wear garments soiled with filth, and eat putrid food. They resemble pigs that lie wallowing in the midst of a cesspool. And now, how can you regard these things as proofs of wisdom?—are they not evidences of madness and folly?

As to the heretics called Sankhyas (sho-lun), they establish twenty-five principles; from prakriti or mûlaprakriti, proceeds mahat; from mahat proceeds ahankara; from this proceed the five subtle particles (called tanmatra); from these proceed the five elements; from these the eleven organs (of sense and action). twenty-four all minister to and cherish the soul (âtman), which accepting and using the help thus given, excludes and removes itself. This being done, then the "soul" remains pure and uncontaminated.2

As for the Vaiseshikas, they establish six predicaments, viz., "the true" (substance), quality, action, existence, the same and the different nature, the harmonious aggregate nature. These six are apprehended by soul, which by apprehending them, not being already liberated, is, by this apprehension, liberated, and by freedom from the six lakshanas,4 it arrives at what is called Nirvâṇa.

¹ Formerly called Wci-si-sse; the expression used in the Text Shing-lun, probably refers to this system, as a logical school of philosophy.

2 The difficulty of this translation is very great. I depend on the Chinese version of the Sankhya-Kūrikū (Nanjio, No. 1300).

3 Colebrooke, p. 182.

4 Chinese "siang."

But now, to rebut the principles of the Sankling-Sister; you say that in the presence of your twenty-five principles, the character of "soul" is distinct and diverse, but by intermingling with the other twenty-four it becomes sub tentrally and intimately one. And you my that Nature (Prairie) is hypostatised by union with the three "gunas" of 'Sattan, "rayas" and "tamas," and by internan_ling of these three, there is perfected the "Mahat" and the other twenty-three principles. thus you aftern that these twenty three principles are perfected by the three gangs But if you construin your "Mahat" and the others, to lay hold of the three, and so to become perfect, as in case of a crowd or a forest? and without this interminating they are filee -how then do you say that "all things are truo" (substantially true) ?

Again, "Mahat" and the re t, being each perfected by the three, then each one so perfected is the same as the whole, but if each is the same as the whole, then the office of each ought to be the same, and then, where is the force of the three forming the substance of all? Arun, if one is the same as all, then the mouth and the cro functions, and so on, are the same as the functions of nature.

Again, if each function discharges the duties of all, then the mouth and the car, and so on, ought to smell perfumes and see colours, for if not, what is the menning of the assertion that the three "quas" make one common substance? How can any sensible man formulate such principles?

But ng un, "Pralriti' and "alman," both being eternal. ought to be in their hypostases identical, how, then, can one, in distinction from the other, by intermingling, produce Mahat, and so on?

But again, with respect to the nature of "diman," if it lers nalexistence lead to graduites of the qualities of that reas we do of the trees of a fo rest say the Su klyas - Colebro ke, 1 158 is eternal, then it is the same as "prakriti"—but if they are the same, then what need of speaking of "atman"?—and then the "atman" is not able to accept the aid of the twenty-four principles, and so there can be no possibility of establishing the different offices of "subject" and "object."

Thus far, and in the same way, he discoursed, whilst the Brahman was silent and unable to reply.¹

But at last, rising up, he respectfully said: "I am overcome; I am ready to abide by the former compact."

The Master of the Law said: "We who are Śâkya-putras do not propose as our end the destruction of the life of men. I now bid you act as my servant and follow my directions (teaching, or doctrine).

The Brâhman was overjoyed and immediately attached himself to his service. All who heard of this affair were filled with admiration and praise.

And now, the Master of the Law being desirous to go to Orissa, inquired about getting the essay of the "Little Vehicle" which proposed to destroy the principles of the "Great Vehicle" in 700 ślokas.

The Master of the Law after examination found several passages of a doubtful character.

He then addressed the Brâhman whom he had conquered: "Have you in former days studied these principles or not?"

He replied: "Yes! I have studied them five times."

The Master of the Law wished to make him speak to the point—on which he said: "How can I, who am your slave, venture to instruct you?"

Then the Master of the Law said: "These are heretical doctrines of which I know nothing: you may speak to me without any compunction."

¹ The foregoing section is omitted by Julien. I offer my translation as tentative only.

"In that case," he said, "let us wait till the middlo of night, lest any of the public should suppose that you had aught to learn from me, your slave, and so lose confidence in your celebrity."

Accordingly when the night was advanced he dismissed all the rest, and caused him to go through the ontiro work.

Then having grasped the errors of the work, he wrote a refutation of it in 1600 slokas, and called it "The destruction of heresy," taking up the doctrines of the Great Velucle, point by point.

He presented the work to Silabhadra, and amongst all the disciples there was not one, on reading the work, but was consenting to it. "Who," they said, "can overturn such arguments?"

And now, not for setful of the origin of this refutation, he said to the Brahman: "You have been sufficiently humiliated as my slave, after conquest had in argument; I now liberate you; you may go where you will"

The Brâhmau, filled with joy, went forth to Kâmarûpa, in Eastern India, and told Kumâra-râpa about the high qualities of the Master of the Law The king houring of it was overjoyed, and immediately sent a message, bidding the Master of the Law to come to him.

BOOK V.

Begins with the prediction of the Nirgrantha relating to his return home, and ends with his arrival in China.

In the interval, before the arrival of the messenger of Kumâra, a naked Nirgrantha disciple, whose name was Vajra, unexpectedly entered the chamber (of the Master of the Law).

Now the Master of the Law had heard of old time that the Nirgranthas are skilled in divination (divining by lots). He asked this man therefore to be seated and opened out his doubts to him, questioning and saying: "Hiuen-Tsiang, a priest of China, has been here inquiring and studying for a year and some months. He now wishes to return home, but does not know whether his way is open to do so, nor whether it is better for his good fortune to stay or to go; he is in doubt, too, about the length or shortness of his life. I pray you, good sir, cast my horoscope and see." 1

The Nirgrantha then took a piece of white stone and drew a figure on the ground, and after casting the lots, he replied: "It is very good for the Master to stay, all the clergy and laity in the five Indies have a profound respect for him; the time for going and successfully returning, with the respect of all, is also fortunate; but not so good as the other. As for the years of your life, you will have ten years added to your present age. But as for evidence as to the continuation of your present good fortune, there is nothing to be found out."

The Master of the Law again asked him: "My mind's

 $^{^{\}rm 1}$ This, in connection with other passages, is sufficient to show the superstitious character of the Pilgrim.

1 m. c is to retern, but I why a great number of images and even d leaks, I having know if I shall succeed in amplies with the tall.

The Neprentlaga'l: "Do not be auxious. Silkhiya riga, and Kun kasalia will themselves despatch men as exert; the Marter will successfully return without society."

The Marker of the Law, in reply, said: "As to these two kings I have never yet seem them, how then can such a kindress defall med"

The Nigraeth said "Kemara-rays has already sent for set arms to invite you to go to him, in two or three days they should arrive. After you have seen Kimara you will allo see SEM tya."

Having thus spoken he went away

The Marter of the law forthwith making up his mind to return, pail especial attention to his books and images.

All the price's hearing of it, come to him in a body and begord him to remain, raying. "India is the place of Buddha's both. The great Saint, although he has present away, has yet left beland him many traces (of his present); what greater happiness in life than to visit, and adore, and exalt there (relies)? Why then do you leave these, after having come so far? Moreover, China is a country of Milechas, men of no importance, and shallow as to religion, and so the Buddhas are never born there. The initial (of the people) is introw, and their coarseness is profound, and hence neither saints nor eages go there from this country; the coldness of the chinate, and the ringgedness of the country—these circumstances, also, are enough to cause, you to think!"

The Master of the Law replied: "The king of the Law, i.e. Ihiddha (Dharmaraja), in establishing the principles of his doctrine, designed them for universal diffusion; how then can those who have received the benefit thereof, exclude those not yet enlightened. In that country of China the superior magistrates are clothed with dignity, and the laws are everywhere respected. The prince is regarded as sacred, the ministers are faithful, parents are loving, children are obedient, virtue and justice are highly esteemed, age and uprightness preferred in honour. Moreover, how deep and mysterious their knowledge! how divine the model of their wisdom! their rules in agreement with heaven. They do not regard the seven heavenly bodies as hidden from their literature, they make instruments, divide the seasons, produce the six sharp-notes of music, and so are able to tame or drive away birds or beasts, subdue the spirits to their will, calm the influences of the yang and yin principles in Nature. From the time the bequeathed doctrine of Buddha penetrated to the East, they have highly venerated the Great Vehicle; in meditation, they are placid as the shining waters; in morals, their renown is like the perfume of opening flowers; in practice, they engage the heart; their earnest vow is to obtain the fullest degree of merit, and by quiet abstraction to prepare for the acquisition of the threefold body, and the highest condition of being.

"The great holy one descending spiritually (into the world), himself raised the standard of religious teaching, and proclaimed the excellent doctrine, he was exhibited in his golden features to the eyes of men, and still there is no check to the aim of his long career.

"How then can you say that Buddha did not go to this country (of China) because of its insignificance?"

They replied: "The Scriptures say that all regions are blessed with plenty or the opposite, according to their meritorious condition in point of religious excellence. It is better for the Master of the Law to live here with us in Jambudvîpa where Buddha was born than to go to

¹ That is, they are acquainted with bodies (viz., the sun, the moon, and the movements of the seven heavenly five planets).

if it country, inaccouch as that is a frentier and an eril country, without any religious ment, and for this mason we ar, o the Master net to return there."

The Master of the Low replied "Vin abblirti, spending to a disciple, rad "Why does the sun travel over datablished" "To disperse the gloom," was the answer. This, slee, is the reason why I purpose to return to my own country."

The priests having perceived that there was no agreement likely, becought him to go (cut) there) to Shabhadra, Master of the Law, and set forth his intention to him. Then Shabhadra, Master of the Law, a ldressing him, said: "Why, ar, love you come to this resolution!"

He replied: "This country is the place of Buddha's birth: it is maps sible not to regard it with affection; only Hiuth-Triang's intention in coming lather was to inquire after the great law for the benefit of his fellow or stirce. Since my arrival here, you, sir, have condescended, on my account, to explain (or, recite) the Yoghelfaya-hhium fixtra, and to investigate doubtful privages. I have visited and adored the accrudicities of our religion, and heard the profound exposition of the different schools. My much hav been overposed, and my visit here, has, I protest, been of the numest profit. I desire now to go brefs and translate and explain to others what I have heard, so as to cause others also to be equally grateful to you, with myself, in hearing and understanding these things; and for this reason I am unwilling to delay my return and remain here."

Silabladra joyfully replied: "These are thoughts worthy of a Bodhisattra; my heart anticipates your own wishes! I will give orders for your conveyance hence; and you, my friends, do not cause any trouble by delaying him."

Having said this, he retired to his room. After two days the messenger sent by Kumara-Raja of Eastern India presented a letter to Silabhadra, to this effect:

"Your disciple wishes to see the great priest come from China. I pray you, respected sir, to send him and so gratify this imperial thought of mine."

Śîlabhadra, on receipt of the letter, announced to the congregation as follows: "Kumâra-Râja wants to invite Hiuen-Tsiang (to go to him), but we have already agreed to induce him to go to Śîlâditya-Râja's residence, to discuss with the (doctors of the) Little Vehicle. If he goes to that one (Kumâra), perhaps Śîlâditya will be expecting him, and then how will he be able to secure his presence? we ought not to send him." And so he told the messenger saying: "The priest of China is anxious to return to his own country and so is unable to comply with the king's request."

The messenger having arrived, the king again despatched another to renew the invitation, in these words: "Although the Master wishes to return home, yet for a little while let him come to your disciple. There shall be no difficulty about his departure. I pray you comply with my humble request, and do not again decline to come."

Silabhadra not having consented to the proposal, the king with great anger sent yet another messenger with a personal despatch for Śîlabhadra, the Master of the Law, to the following effect: "Your disciple like a common man has followed the way of worldly pleasure, and has not yet learnt the converting power residing in the law of And now when I heard the name of the priest Buddha. belonging to the outside country, my body and soul were overjoyed; expecting the opening of the germ of religion (within me). But you, sir, have again refused to let him come here, as if you desired to cause the world to be for ever plunged in the dark night (of ignorance). Is this the way in which your Eminence hands down and transmits the bequeathed law for the deliverance and salvation of all the world? Having an invincible longing to think kindly of and show respect to (the Master), I have again sent a messen, or with a written request of he does not come, your disciple will then let the evil portion of himself prevail. In recent times Susingka-rhy, was equal still to the destruction of the law and my rooted the Bödhi tree. Do you, my Master, suppose that your disciple has no such power as this? If necessary then I will equip my army and elephants, and like the clouds sweep down on and trumple to the very dust that mountery of Nalanda. These words (are true) as the sun! Master it is better for you to examine and see (what you will do)"

Silubhadra having received the letter, addressed the Master of the Law thus 'With regard to that king, his better mind (or, virtuous mind) is first bound and weak, within his territories the law of Buddia has not widely extended since the time that he heard your honourable name, he has formed a deep attachment for your, perhaps you are destined to be in this period of your existence his 'good friend. 'Use your best diligence then and go You have become a disciple in order to benefit the world, thus then is perhaps your just opportunity and as when you destroy a tree you have only to cut through the root, and the branches will of themselves wither away, so when you arrive in that country only cause the heart of the king to open (to the truth) and then the people will also be converted. But if you refuse and do not go, then perhaps there will be evil deeds done. Do not shrink from this slight trouble."

The Master of the Law, leaving his teacher, went with the envoy, and arrived there. The king seeing him was greatly rejoiced, and met him with his great officers, and paying him reverence with much ecremony, conducted him within his pulsee. Every day he arranged music and banquets, with religious offerings of flowers and incense, and requested him to follow the ordinary rules of religious fast days.

¹ I or this express on side Hang s Essays on the Parsees (Trib er's Edition) p. 200.

Thus passed a month and more, when Śilâditya-râja, returning from his attack on Kongyôdha, heard that the Master of the Law was residing with Kumâra. Being surprised, he said: "I frequently asked him to come here before this—and he did not come, how is it that he is now living there?" Sending a messenger, therefore, he bade Kumâra-râja to send the priest of China to him at once.

The king replied, "He can take my head, but he cannot take the Master of the Law yet." The messenger returning gave this answer, on which the Śîlâditya-râja was greatly enraged, and calling together his attendants, he said: "Kumâra-râja despises me. How comes he to use such coarse language in the matter of a single priest?"

Then he sent another messenger who said, in an abrupt manner: "Send the head, that I may have it immediately by my messenger who is to bring it here."

Kumâra, deeply alarmed at the folly of his language—immediately ordered his army of elephants, 20,000 in number, to be equipped, and his ships, 30,000 in number. Then embarking with the Master of the Law they passed up the Ganges together in order to reach the place where Sîlâditya-râja was residing. When he arrived at the country of Kie-shu-ho-ki-lo (Kajûrgira), there was a conference held, and Kumâra, being about to depart to explain matters, first ordered some men to construct on the north bank of the Ganges a pavilion-of-travel, and then on a certain day he passed over the river and coming to the pavilion he there placed the Master of the Law, after which he himself with his ministers went to meet Sîlâditya-râja on the north bank of the river.

Śîlâditya seeing him coming was overjoyed, and knowing his respect and love for the Master of the Law, he did not repeat his former threatening words, but simply asked him where the priest of China was stopping.

In reply he sail: "He is staying in a certain paythonof truck

The king out: " And why did he not come with you !" "Peptung to said: "Malarija has respect for the suturus, and loves teligion, why not and for the Marier to cor e to e ifer with the ling!"

The Line and " It is well, but for the persent you may depart to your residence, and to-morrow I myself will cone "

Kumira returning spike to the Master of the Law, saving "The Ling although he says he will come to merrow, I ruspect he will come to-malit, and we must attend him when he comes-but if he arrives, let not the Master be moved (with anxiety)"

The Master of the law replied "Hinen-Israng will conduct himself according to the directions of the law of Moddle "

About the first watch of the maht the king did in effect mirise. There were some men who reported that on the river there were several thousand halited torches. and that they heard the sound of beating drums

The king said . "This is Siladitya raja uppreaching"

He munchately ordered them to take torches in hand, whilst he himself, with his ministers, went forth a long way to meet him

As Siladitya-rips murched, he was always accompanied by several hundred persons with sollen arums, who beat one stroke for every step taken, they called these the 'music pace-druins" (tinh-po-ku) Siia htya alone used this method—other kings were not permitted to adopt it.

On his arrival the king bowed down at the feet of the Master of the Law, then scattering flowers before him he regarded him with respect, and uttered his praises in verses mnumerable; this done, he addressed the Master thus

"Your disciple invited the Master in former days to come,-why did you not comply with my request?"

Answering, he said: "Hiuen-Tsiang came from far in search of the law of Buddha, and for the sake of hearing the Yôga-bhûmi-śâstra. When your order arrived I had not finished examining this sâstra, and so did not immediately come to meet the king."

Again the king asked, as follows: "The Master comes from China; your disciple has heard that that country has a king of Ts'in, whose fame is celebrated in songs and airs set for dancing and music; I never yet knew who this king of Ts'in was, or what his distinguished merit was, that led to this distinction."

The Master of the Law said: "In my country when there is a man observable for the quality of protecting the good, capable of averting evil from the people, and able to nourish and cherish with fostering care all living things—then they sound his praise in songs and chants arranged to music, in the first place, for the ancestral temple; and then for the use of the distant village folk. The king of Ts'in is the same, now, as the reigning Emperor of China-but before the highest authority of the Emperor (i.e. She-wong-ti) was established, then he was but invested as prince of Ts'in. This was a period of disorder in heaven and earth; the people had no ruler, the fields and plains were covered with the bodies of men, the streams and valleys were full of their blood; during the night ill-omened stars shed their pestilent light, vapours rose with the day, the three rivers were infested by voracious toll-collectors, and the four seas were afflicted with the poison of monstrous snakes.

"The Prince, as the next of kin to the supreme ruler (ti), obedient to the call of Heaven, filled with noble ardour, rallied his troops, put down the oppressors (male and female, k'ing i) by force; seizing the battle-axe and the lance, he quickly calmed the sea, the villagers were

¹ The reference is presumably to the Emperor She-wong-ti, B.C. 221.

Infoundly qu'et, and the districts restered to order as before. The sun and moon and stars shone out agon, and the wrill was filled with gratifule for his care. For this reason we singles praises."

The king sails "Such a man is one sout by Lowen to be the Lord of the world."

This taking leve, he dejuitely

On the next in rining the messenger came, and the Master of the Law with Kundra went together to Sifeditya's pelice, on arriving near which the king with some twenty attendants came fouth to meet them. Datering they set down, when chose visuals were set before them, are manned with music and strewn flowers.

The entertainment being over, the king raid: "I have heard that the Master has composed a Sastra with a view to restrain wicked doctrine—where is this work?"

The Master of the Law replied, "It is here," and then he caused the hing to take it and look at it.

Having examined it the king was much pleased, and addressing his attendants and the rest, he add: "I have heard that when the sun rises in its splendom the light of the glow-worm is eclipsed, and when the sound of heaven's thunder is heard, then the noise of the humaner and chied is silenced; so with regard to the doctrine which the Master defends, all the others have been destroyed, and in discussing the method of right deliverance, the prests have not dated to offer a word."

The king said (moreover), "The chief Sthavira of the priests, Devasina, said of himself—that in the explanation of dectrine he was superior to all his rivals, and in his studies embraced all branches of science. But in advancing his strange opinions he ever opposed the 'Great Vehicle.' Hearing, however, that the stranger priest had come he forthwith went to Vâíśalî, to pay reverence to the sacred vestiges—from this I gather that all these priests are without ability in discussion."

The king had a sister of great intelligence who was distinguished for knowledge of the Sammatîya-school doctrine; she was sitting behind the king, and as she heard the Master of the Law extolling the doctrine of the Great Vehicle, and exposing the extreme poverty of the Little school of Doctrine, she was filled with joy, and could not cease her praises.

Then the king said: "The treatise written by the Master is very good; quite enough to convince both your disciple (i.e. himself), and all these teachers, and the faithful generally; but I fear there are other sectaries belonging to the Little Vehicle, of other countries, who will still cling to and defend their foolish doctrine. I propose therefore to call a grand assembly in the town of Kanyâkubja, and command the Śramans and Brâhmans and heretics of the five Indies to attend, in order to exhibit the refinements of the Great Vehicle, and demolish their abusive mind, to make manifest the exceeding merit of the Master, and overthrow their proud thought of 'self.'"

The same day he sent an order throughout the different kingdoms that all the disciples of the various schools should assemble in the town of Kanyâkubja to investigate the treatise of the Master of the Law, of China.

Then the Master of the Law, at the beginning of winter, in company with the king, advanced up the river (Ganges) and in the beginning of the last month 1 of the year arrived at the rendezvous.

¹ In the Records, i. 218, we are told they were ninety days in their progress towards the rendezvous. Ishould Varsha.

There were pres at kings of eighteen 1 countries of the five hi dies: 2 three thousand per atathorou his acquainted with the Great and Little Vehicl breides about three thor and It Ahmens and Nir. renthes and about a tho is and prients of the Malanda morraters. All the conved persons, able calchaired for their hierary shill as for their dislectic attended the assembly with a view to consider and listen to the sounds of the law, they were accommunied with followers, some on elephants, some in chario's, some in a rangums, some under cruot tes. Lach was surrounded by its own occuliar attendants, like the clouds for multituck which in the wint r time spread through many rcores of make, and if we end that they were hile the standards of the relations tribes of the three Wir" or like the drops of run which fall from the clouds even this would not be an exageration

The King had previously ordered two thatched halls to be constructed at the piace of the assembly for recenting the figures (of Buddha) and the body of the disciples.

When he arrived they were both finished, they were lofty and spicious, each capible of scating a thousand The trivelling prince of the king was some five h to the west of the place of assembly, he had in this palice cast a golden statue, and now, ordering a great elephant to be equipped with a precious dais on its back. he placed thereon (the statue of) Buddha Then Slla hty a rain, under the form of Lord Sikra, with a white chowree in his hand, weut on the right, and Kutaara-rain, under the form of Brahma-rays, with a precious parasol in his hand, went to the left They both wore tiarns like the Dêvas, with flower wreaths and jewelled ribbons

Moreover, they harnessed two other great elephants and laded them with jewels and flowers for precious

¹ The Si ju Listates il al therewere Central India, but it is not so in twenty ki ge present rule Records the text. L 218
2 Julien says "eighteen ki ge of fice l The passage in the original is de-flowers) to follow behind the image of Buddha, and each step they took they scattered these flowers abroad.

The Master of the Law and the chief servants of the king were directed severally to mount a great elephant, and to follow the king in order; moreover, there were other 300 great elephants appointed for the princes, great ministers, and chief priests of the different countries, on which they rode in double file on each side of the procession course, chanting laudatory verses as they went. The procession began at early dawn from the travelling palace (of the king). As they drew nigh the gate of the outer court of the place of assembly, each one was directed to dismount whilst they conducted the figure of Buddha within the hall. There they placed it on a precious throne, whilst the king and the Master of the Law, in succession, presented it with offerings.

After this the king ordered the princes of the eighteen countries to enter the Hall; then, of the most renowned priests celebrated for learning he selected about one thousand to enter the hall; of celebrated Brahmans and followers of heretical doctrine he selected five hundred to enter the hall, and about two hundred of the great ministers of the different kingdoms. The unbelievers and secular persons (who were not able to be admitted) he ordered to be seated outside the gate of the entrance hall.

The king then sent to those within and without, alike, food to eat. This done, he presented as an offering to Buddha ¹ a golden dish, a golden cup, seven golden ewers, one golden staff, three thousand gold pieces, and three thousand vestments of superior cotton-stuff.

The Master of the Law and the other priests each offered according to their different ability.

This being over, the king caused a precious couch to be arranged, and invited the Master of the Law to sit upon it as Lord of the discussion.

The Master then began to extol the teaching of "the

¹ Julien translates this passage very differently, Vic, p. 244.

Given Vehicle," and amore cell a subject for discussion, and hold must be self Merodice a Sharm of the Nilmbia to the try, to exhibit it to the trember of the mid Continue, by the close to the place of secretly exhibiting the same to the whole people, and a blog, "if there is anyone will care it he as no be well in the projection contrary to reas not a subject to committee the energy of the opening of the appropriate that the repression of the opposite to feel as the expect of the opposite to offer my head as a traction of "

Thus until in lit there was no one who came forward to take a word

Sill https://jps.very.w.ll.pleased at the event, adjourned the assembly and returned to his palace, whilst the prince said the prince said the prince standard King by a figurant the Master of the Law retired to their restings place.

On the morrow this a nin executed the image, the

After five days had passed, the unladiences of the Lettle Vehicle, seeing he had overturned their school, filled with solein, alorted to take his life

The Ling herring of it, issued this proclimation. "The seeking of error obscuring the truth, is the experience of ag a. (The followers of false do-trine), Inding the true, deceive the people, if the world were without a iperior fit es, how could their falschood be discovered? The Matter of the Law of China, whose spiritual power is so vast, and whose power of explaintion is so grand and deep, with a view to rebut the errors of the people, has come to sojourn here, to exhibit the character of the great Law, and to rescue the foolish and the deceived but the followers of delusion and falsehood, not knowing the way of repentance or the forsiking of error, have conceived a murderous purpose against his person; this intention must inspire every one with resentment. If, then, any one should hurt or touch the Master of the Law, he shall be forthwith beheaded; and whoever speaks against him, his tongue shall be cut out; but all those who desire to profit by his instruction, relying on my goodwill, need not fear this manifesto."

From this time the followers of error withdrew and disappeared, so that when eighteen days had passed there had been no one to enter on the discussion.

The evening before the dispersion of the assembly the Master of the Law again extolled the Great Vehicle, and sounded the praises of the religious merit of Buddha, by which a vast number of men were converted from error and entered on the right path: forsaking the Little Vehicle, they found refuge in the Great Vehicle.

Śîlâditya-râja, reverencing him more than ever, bestowed on the Master of the Law 10,000 pieces of gold, 30,000 pieces of silver, 100 garments of superior cotton, whilst the princes of the eighteen kingdoms each presented him with rare jewels. But all these the Master of the Law declined to accept.

The king then ordered his attendant ministers to place a howdah upon a great elephant, with the request that the Master of the Law would mount thereon, whilst he directed the great Ministers of state to accompany him; and as they passed through the throng he directed the proclamation to be made that "he had established the standard of right doctrine, without gainsaying."

This is the custom of the Western kingdoms whenever any one has obtained the victory in discussion.

The Master of the Law desired to waive this mark of distinction and not to go in procession, but the king said: "It has ever been the custom, the matter cannot be passed over"—and ro, holding the Master of the Law by his kashiya garment, they everywhere proclaimed, "The Master of the Law from the king iom of China has established the principles of the Grast Vehicle and overthrown all opposing doctrines, for eighteen days no one has dared to enter on the discussion. Let this be known everywhere, as it out ht to be!"

The whole multitude were filed with joy on account of the Master's success, and all wished to fix for him a name in connection with his principles.

The congregation of the Great Vehicle called him Mahayana Dava, that is, the Dava of the Great Vehicle, whilst the followers of the Intile Vehicle called him Makaha Dava, are the Dava of deliverance. Then they harm means and scattered flowers, and paid him reverence and dejarted.

I rom this time (or, circumstance) the report of his eminence (cirtue) spread abroad everywhere

To the west of the king's travelling palace there was a San haram under the patronage of the king. In this building there was a tooth of Buddha about an inch and half long and of a jellowish white colour. It ever emits a spirkling light.

In old drys when the Krityal race in Kasimr had destroyed the law of Buddha, and the priests and their disciples were scattered every where, there was a Bhikshin who travelled (from there) after through India. His follower, the king of Hunatala, of Turkhāra, was enraged that this despicable race should destroy the law of Buddha, disguised himself as a merchant, and with a company of 3000 men of might, he took with him many valuable pixels, under the pretext, as he gave out, of offering them (to the king)

¹ Rubruquis calls the kirals, Crsf, ing to Howerth, were a Turkish race, rds also Urindles I tolemy (Indian descended from the Ugburs. Ind. Antiq) p. 400. The Kirais, accord. Asiap Nov 1880, p. 276.

The king, who was of a covetous disposition, was overjoyed when he heard the news, and sent some messengers to escort him on the way.

But the king of Himatala, who was of a disposition fierce and haughty, and dignified in his carriage like a god, when he arrived at the throne of the king, took off his bonnet and denounced him. The Kritya king seeing him thus, was terrified, and forthwith in rising fell to the ground.

The king of Himatala cut off his head which he had seized, and then addressed the body of his ministers and said: "I am the king of Himatala; bearing in mind that you slaves had destroyed the law of Buddha I have come to punish you. But as the fault lies with one man, it would be wrong to involve you in it. You may therefore rest in peace; I shall, however, banish the chief of those who incited the king to his wicked conduct to a distant land; as to the rest I exact nothing." Having exterminated the odious race, he founded a Sanghârâma, and assembling the priests he gave it to them, and returned.

The Bhikshu before alluded to who had gone to India, hearing that his country was restored to quiet, began to return there, staff in hand. On the way he encountered a herd of trumpeting elephants approaching him. The Bhikshu, when he saw them, climbed into a tree to hide himself. The elephants forthwith began to pour water on the tree from their trunks, and then with their tusks they underdug it, and after a while it fell. The elephants then lifted the Bhikshu on the back of one of the herd with their trunks, and went off with him.

They arrived at the middle of a great wood, where there was a sick elephant suffering from a wound and lying on the ground.

The elephant then drew the hand of the Bhikshu to touch the place of his suffering. Looking at the swollen part, he saw that a bamboo splinter had pierced it—drawing this out he washed away the blood, and tearing up his robe, he bound up the wound, so that the elephant got gradual ease. Next morning the herd all went nway to seel for fruits, which, when found, they respectfully offered to the Blackhu. The Blackhu laxing caten thereof, an chill and with n golden critet came to the wounded eleft and with n golden critet came to the wounded eleft and and effected it to him. This one, having received it, offered it to the Blad shu. The Blad shu having taken it, all the herd tool him out of the wood to the original spot where their found him, and placing him on the ground, in d lowly reverse, and departed.

The Bhil shu opening the crisket, lo! there was the too'h of Buddha. Til ing it back (t) his cou itry), he

ilevoted him self to its worship (culture)

In recent times slikhty rifigs, hearing that Kasimir possessed a tooth of Buddha, coming in person to the chief frontier, asked permission to see and worship it. The congregation, from a feeling of sordid avariee, were unwilling to consent to this request and so took the relic and concealed it. But the kin, fearing the exalted character of Silchtva, set about dig,ing here and there till he found the relic, and having found it, presented it to the ling. Silchtva seeing it was overpowered with reverence, and exercising force, carried to fit to pay it religious offerings. This is the tooth spoken of

After breaking up the assembly the king hunded over to the Safgharam the golden image he had east and the garments and money, warning the priests to talle care of them

The Master of the Law, first taking leave of the priests from the Manda convent, having taken his books and images on the 19th day, the conference being ended, paid his respects to the ling with n view to his departure home

The hing stud "Your disciple, succeeding to the royal authority, has been lord of India for thirty years and more. I have constantly regretted the small increase to my religious merit, resulting from a wint of previous good deeds. In consequence of this I have accumulated every kind of treasure and precious substance in the kingdom of Prayâga, and between the banks of the two rivers, I have established a great religious convocation every five years, to attend which all the Śramans and Brahmans of the five Indies are invited, and besides these the poor and the orphans and the destitute; on this occasion during seventy-five days the great distribution of alms called the Moksha is attended to; I have completed five of these assemblies and am now about to celebrate the sixth: why does not the Master delay his departure till then, and so, by witnessing the spectacle, rejoice with us?" The Master answered, "Bôdhisattva by meritorious

The Master answered, "Bôdhisattva by meritorious conduct and by wisdom prepared himself (for enlightenment); the wise man having obtained the fruit (of his conduct), does not forget the root (of his happiness); if your Majesty does not grudge his treasure for the good of others, how can Hiuen-Tsiang grudge a short delay (in his departure). I ask leave, therefore, to accompany your Majesty on your journey."

The king hearing this was delighted, and on the twenty-first day he went forward, conducting him to the kingdom of Po-lo-ye-kia (Prayâga), and proceeded to the great-distribution arena. This was bounded on the north by the Ganges (King-kia), and on the south by the Jumnâ (Yen-mu-na). These two rivers coming from the north-west and flowing eastward, unite their stream in this kingdom.

On the west of the place of junction of the two rivers there is a great plain some fourteen or fifteen li in circuit. It is flat and even like a mirror. From days of old the various kings have frequented this spot for the purpose of practising charity: and hence the name given to it, the "Arena of Charitable Offerings." There is a tradition which says that it is more advantageous to give one mite in charity in this place than a thousand in any other place: and therefore from old times this place has been held in honour.

¹ i.e., the Jumna and Ganges.

The king directed them to portion out on this space a square enclosure for distributing the charitable offerings, enclosed by a bamboo hedge 1000 pages each side, and in the middle to erect many scores of thatched buildings in which to deposit all the treasures (intended for distribution); to wit, gold, silver, fine pearls, red glass, the precious substance called the Tr-tsing-chu (the Indranila pearl), the Ta-tsing-chi (the Mahanila pearl), &c. constructed, moreover, by the side of these, several hundred store-henses (long buildings) in which to place the silk and cotten garments, the gold and silver money. and so on

Outside the enclosing hedge, he caused to be made places for partaking of food. In front of the various depositories for treasure, he, moreover, erected some hundred or so long buildings arranged like the marketplaces of our capital, in which some theusand people might sit down for rest.

Some time before these preparations the king had summened by decree, through the five Indies, the Sramans, hereties, Nirgranthas, the peer, the erphans, and the solitary (bereared), to come together to the Arena of Charity, to receive the prepared gifts.

As the Master of the Law had not yet returned from the assembly at Kanyakubia, he now hastened to the place of the distribution of charity. The kings of eighteen kingdoms, moreover, fellowed in the suite of the royal monarch with a like purpose. Airived at the spot they found a bedy of people amounting to 500,000. or so, already arrived.

Si adıtya-raja pitched his tent on the north bank of the Ganges. The king of South India, Tu-lu-po-pa-cha (Dhravabatta or Dhravabhata), located himself on the west of the junction of the rivers. Kumara-raja occupied the south side of the river Jumna, by the side of a flowering grove. All the recipients of bounty occupied the ground to the west of the position of Dhruvabatta raja.

On the morrow morning the military followers of Śilâditya-râja, and of Kumâra-râja, embarked in ships, and the attendants of Dhruvabaṭṭa-râja mounted their elephants, and so, arranged in an imposing order, they proceeded to the place of the appointed assembly. The kings of the eighteen countries joined the cortège according to arrangement.

On the first day of the first period, they installed the image of Buddha within one of the thatched buildings on the field of charity. They then distributed precious articles of the first quality, and clothing of the same character, and offered exquisite meats, whilst they scattered flowers to the sound of music. At the close of the day they retired to their tents.

The second day they installed the image of Aditya-deva, and distributed precious things and clothing in charity, to half the amount of the previous day.

The third day they installed the image of Isvara-deva, and distributed gifts as on the day before.

On the fourth day they gave gifts to 10,000 of the religious community, arranged in a hundred ranks. Each received 100 pieces of gold, one pearl, one cotton garment, various drinks and meats; flowers and perfumes. After the distribution they retired.

The fifth arrangement was the bestowal of gifts to the Brahmans, which lasted for twenty days.

The sixth turn related to the heretics, which lasted ten days.

The next occasion was the bestowal of alms on those who came from distant spots to ask for charity: this lasted for ten days.

The eighth distribution was to the poor and the orphans and destitute, which occupied a month.

By this time the accumulation of five years was exhausted. Except the horses, elephants, and military accountrements which were necessary for maintaining order and protecting the royal estate, nothing remained. Besides these the Ling freely give away his gens and goods, his clothing and necklaces, car-rages, bracelets, chaplets, neck-jewel and bright head-jewel, all these he freely gave without stint.

All leing given away, he begged from his sister an onlineary recend-hand garment, and having put it on he paid worship to the Buddhas of the ten regions, and as he exulted with joy with his bands closed in adoration, he said: "In amassing all this wealth and treasure I ever feared that it was not safely stored in a strong place; but now having bestowed this treasure in the field of religious ment, I can safely say it is nell b stowed. Oh that I (Silddura) may in all my future buths ever thus religiously give in charity to makind my stores of wealth, and thus complete in myself the ten independent powers (dafalalas) [of a Buddha]."

The two mignificent convocations being finished the kings severally distributed among the people their money and treasure for the purpose of redeeming the royal necklices, hair-jewels, court vestments, &c., and then taking them, restored them to the king; and then after a few days there same things were again given away in charity, as before.

But now the Master of the Law requested the king to let him return home, as he desired,

The king replied: "Your humble disciple, in common with yourself, desires to spread far and wide the knowledge of the bequeathed law of Buddha; why then do you so hastily return hone?"

On this he remained yet another ten days.

Kumara-raja also was courteously affected towards him, and addressed the Master thus: "If the Master is able to dwell in my dominious and receive my religious offerings, I will undertake to found one hundred monasteries on the Master's behalf."

Hiuen-Tsiang, perceiving that the kings' purpose was not to let him go, afflicted with grief, addressed them as follows: "The country of China is very far from this, and has but recently heard of the law of Buddha. Although it has received a general knowledge of the truth, yet it has not accepted it in its entirety. On this account therefore have I come to inform myself how to put an end to differences. And now having completed my aim, (I remember) how the learned men of my country are longing to fathom to their depth the points I have ascertained. Therefore I dare not delay a moment, remembering the words of the Sûtra:-- 'Whoever hinders men from a knowledge of religion shall, for generation after generation, be born blind; '—if then you hinder my return you will cause countless disciples to lose the benefit resulting from a knowledge of the law; how then will you escape the dread of being deprived of sight?"

The king replied: "Your humble disciple admires and

The king replied: "Your humble disciple admires and values the virtue of the Master; and I would ever look up to and serve him; but to stand in the way of the benefit of so many men would truly cause my heart to be filled with fear: I leave the Master to his choice, to go, or to stay; but I know not, if you prefer to go, by what route you propose to return; if you select the Southern Sea route then I will send official attendants to accompany you."

The Master replied: "When I left China and arrived at the western limits of the country, I reached a territory called Kau-chang; the king of this place was an enlightened man and passionately attached to the Law. When he saw me, in my search after the truth, come to his kingdom, he was filled with profound joy, and freely provided the with every recently, praying me on my riture to vest him even news, my least is madde to fractors of statesty; I will therefore return by the Northern real."

¹ That is, by way of Java, or Sumatra.

The king answered, "I pery you, then, let me know what y was eas you strad in reed of"

Tile Master rethed; "I require nothing"

The I'm; sail, "It is impenable to permit you to go thes"

On this the king ordered them to effer him gold co mand ther things. Kun transparate between on him every rest of valuable. But the Maxter would take none of them, except from Kunnar-typ he accepted a cape called Folia h (Himit), trade of coarse skin lined with soft down, which was designed to protect from rain whilst on the read.

Thus be took his departure. The king with a large body of after limits accompanied him for several ten his, and then returned. On their final separation they could note of them restrain their tears and rad lamontations.

As for his books and mages, the Master confided them to the unitary execut of a king of North India called Udhita, to be carried on horrelack, but the advance being slow King Silvhitya inferiwards attached to the execut of Udhita-ihja a great elephant, with 3000 gold pieces and 10,000 riber pieces, for defraying the Master's expenses on the road.

Three days after reparation the king, in company with Kumara-raja and Dhruvabatta-raja, took several hundred light horsemen and again came to accompany him for a time and to take final leave, so kindly disposed were the Lings to the Master. Then he commissioned four Ta-kuni (official guides) to accompany the escort; they call such officers Mo-ho-ta-lo (Mahataras?) The king also wrote some letters on fine white cotton stuff and sealed them with red wax (or, composition), which he ordered the Ta-kwan officers to present in all the countries through which they conducted the Master, to the end that the princes of these countries might provide carriages or modes of conveyance to escort the Master even to the borders of China.

From the country of Prayâga he went south-west, through a great desert waste for seven days, when he arrived at the kingdom of Kauśâmbî. To the south of the city is the place where the lord Goshira presented a garden to Buddha.

Having adored the sacred traces again, he proceeded with Udhita-râja north-west for one month and some days, passing through various countries. Once more he paid adoration to the sacred traces of the heavenly ladder, and then proceeding north-west three yojanas, he came to the capital of the country of Pi-lo-na-na (Vîra-shana). Here he halted two months, during which time he met with two fellow students, Simhaprabha and Simhachandra, who discoursed with him on the Kôsha-sam-pârigraha-Śâstra, the Vidyâ-mâtra-siddha-śâstra, &c. He was met and escorted by all the people with great rejoicings.

When the Master of the Law had arrived, he took up his discourse on the Yoga-śâstra-kârika, and the Abhidharma-śâstra. At the end of the two months he took his leave of them, and continued on a north-western route for one month and some days. Passing through various countries, he arrived at the kingdom of Che-lan-ta (Jâlandhara), the royal city of North India. Here he halted one month.

Udhita-râja now sent with him an escort, with which, proceeding to the west for twenty days or so, he came to the country of Suithapura. At this time there were about 100 treests belonging to the North, who were in charge of sacred bool , images, &c., thes , relying on the e cort accompanying the Master of the Law, returned in his company And so they went on fer about twenty days through mountain defiles. The e spots being much frequented by robbers, the Master of the Law feared they might be spoiled in an encounter with them and so male a rule to send on a brother in front, who if he met any robbers, was told to say, 'We have come from a long distance searching for the Law, and now we are carrying with us nothing but the sacred books of our religion, and images and holy relies Wo pray you, therefore, to be our patrons (danapatis), and protect us without exhibiting a hostile mind ' Tho Master of the Law with his companions and followers brought up the rear By these means they escaped any harm from the brigands whem they encountered

¹ Vide Records, vol. i. p. 201, n. 107.

Thus trivelling on for about twent; days, they reached the country of Tahshirsha, where the Master again did reverence to the spet where Chaulrapmbha-ran gave for a thousand times his head in charity

To the north-east of this country lifty yojanas, is the kingdom of Kasimir

The king of this country sent messengers to invite the Master of the Law to come to hun, but on account of the heavily laden elephants he was unable to go

After a delay of seven days, he again set forward in a north westerly direction, and after three days, reached the great river Sindhi. This river is five or six It wide. The books, images, and fellow travellers were embarked on board a bent for the pissage across but the Master of the Law crossed the stream mounted on an elephant.

He had deputed one man to accompany the bort for the purpose of leeking after and protecting the books and all the different flower-seeds of India And now when the boat was in the mid-stream, all at once the winds and the waters commingling, caused the waves to rise, and the boat, violently tossed, was almost swallowed up. The guardian of the books, filled with terror, fell into the water, but was finally rescued by the passengers; but there were lost fifty manuscript copies of Sûtras, and the flower seeds of various sorts. With these exceptions, all else they managed to save.

At this time the king of Kapiśa, who formerly dwelt in the town of U-to-kia-han-ch'a (Uṭakhâṇḍa), hearing that the Master of the Law had come, himself went to the river-side to pay his respects and escort him. Then he said: "I have heard that the Master has lost many sacred books in the middle of the river. Did you not bring with you here from India flower-seeds and fruit?"

"I did so," he replied.

"That is the sole reason," the king said, "of the storm that damaged the boat. It has been so from days of old till now, whoever attempts to cross the river with seeds of flowers is subject to similar misfortunes."

The Master then returned to the city with the king, and took up his abode in a temple-convent for fifty days or so. In consequence of losing his copies of the Sûtras, he despatched certain persons to the country of Udyâna, for the purpose of copying out the Tripiṭaka of the Kâśya-pîya school.

The king of Kaśmir, hearing that the Master was gradually nearing his kingdom, in spite of the distance, came in person to pay his respects, and, after some days, returned.

The Master of the Law, in company with the king of Kapiśa, proceeding for a month in a north-west direction, came to the frontiers of the country of Lan-po (Lamghân).

The king sent his son, the heir to his throne, in advance, to direct the people of the expital and the body of priests to prepare flags and lamines, and with them to march from the city to excert (the carulcade back to the city)

And now the king and the Master of the Low graduuily approached—and on their arrival they found several thousands of eleries and by people with flags and banners a vast concour c, awaiting them

The people, on seeing the Master of the Law were overjoyed, and paul him reverence after which they went before him and in the rear surrounding him as they advanced, sounding his prives. Arrived in the capital they lodged in a temple of the Great Vehicle. At this time the king held a great assembly for bestowing charity (Melsha unhaldina), during seventy-five days.

Once more, going right south for fifteen days he halted in the country of In la ma (Varana) for the purpose of adoring the secred traces

Again, going north-west he stopped in the kingdom of O-po-lan (Aval an) Again advancing to the north west, he stopped in the country of Toru lu ch'a (Isail fitz)

Again, going north 500 h, he reached the country of Io-h shi, and the country of Sa tang na (perhaps a mistake for Fo lo shi sa tang ha, i.e. Vardashhan). I rom this going east, they energed on the frontiers of Kapisa. Here the king again held a great assembly for distributing gofts during seven days after which the Master of the Law requested to be allowed to take his have and advance homewards. Going north-east one jojana they came to Kii his a pang (Krosapam?), here he separated from the king and proceeded northward

The king sent with him a great officer, accompanied by a hundred men, as an escort, whilst he crossed the Snowy Mountains, and to convey fuel, provisions, and other requisites for the journey, which the king provided.

After seven days they reached a great mountain top; this mountain is marked by its sharp-pointed peaks and dangerous crags, which mount upwards in different and strange forms. Now and then there is a flat surface, and then a high sharp peak; there is no uniformity. It would be impossible to narrate the difficulties and fatigues to which they were exposed in crossing these heights.

From this point they were no longer able to ride on horseback: the Master therefore advanced, supported by his staff.

After seven days more they came to a lofty mountain pass at the foot of which there was a village of about 100 houses. The people feed flocks of sheep which are as large as asses. Here they stopped for the day and set off again at midnight, having induced a villager to precede them on a mountain camel as a guide.

In this land there are numerous snow-drifts and glaciers (crevasses). If travellers do not carefully follow the steps of their guide, there is great danger of falling and perishing.

They went on thus from dawn till sunset crossing these frozen peaks. At this time the company consisted only of seven priests, twenty followers, one elephant, and ten asses, and four horses.

On the morrow they reached the bottom of the pass. Tracing their way through a tortuous road they now directed their march towards a ridge which seemed as if covered with snow, but when they got to it they found nothing but white stones. This ridge is very high, so that, although cloud-wrapped, the flying snow does not reach its summit. It was towards sundown when they got to the mountain top, but the freezing wind was so icy cold, that not one of the travellers dared pause on the top 1

This mount un affords no trace of selectation, but only stores beyond up in confusion and swike and slender runnacles, lil e a forest of trees devoid of leaves. Beyond this siot the mountain is so high that when the wind suddenly rises the linds on wing cannot pass it in their flight. From the south of the ridge to the north of the ridge, there is a distance of several hundred paces—this 1 weed then one can find a little cas

Throughout Jamindsips we shall not find among the mountain peaks a lu-lier one than this

The Master of the Law having descended some h to the north-west, found a small level space where he spread his tent for the milit. In the morning he again advanced and after descending the mountain for five or six days he came to the country called An-ta lo fo , o (Antaraya Andrail), this country is the old territory of Tu ho lo (Inkhara)

There are here three Sangharlmas and some scores of priests. They belong to the Mahlsafighila school There is one Stupa built by Asol a-raja

The Master stopped hero five days and then going north west four hundred h or so still descen hing the mountain, he reached the country of Kwoh seh-to (Khost) which again formed a part of the old territory of Tu ho lo (Tukhira) 2

Proceeding north west from this place and still continuing along the mountains for 300 h or so he reached the kingdom of Hwoh (Kunduz) which lies along the side of the Oxus river (Po-tsu); this is the eastern boundary of Tukhâra. The capital is situated on the southern ¹ bank of the river.

Cf lec rds ii 285 Or the old T u santerritory of lecords i 1 37 n 121

The Master, because he saw that the nephew of Shehu-khan, was ruling over Tukhâra, calling himself Shehu (i.e. chieftain), he repaired to his encampment and remained there one month. The She-hu having sent a guard of soldiers to accompany him, he, and the merchants in his train, went to the east two days and arrived at Mung-kin (Munjan). Connected with this territory is the country of O-li-ni (Ahreng), the country of Ho-lo-hu (Roh), the country of Ki-li-sse-mo (Krishma, or, Kishm), the country of Po-li-ho (Parika); all these countries formed a part of the old territory of Tukhâra.

Again going east from Mung-Kien, entering the mountains and travelling for 300 li or so—we come to the country of Hi-mo-ta-lo (Himatala); this also was a part of the old Tukhâra territory. The habits of the people are in general like those of the Tuh-kiuch (Turks). There is one difference, however, which is, that the married women wear in their head-dress a wooden horn about three feet high. It has a division in front signifying the father and the mother of the husband. The higher division signifies the father—the lower, the mother—and as either of them dies the division (or branch) corresponding to that one, is removed; when both are dead, then the horn is entirely removed.

From this, again going eastward 200 li or so, they arrived at Po-to-na (for, Po-to-chang-na) [Badakshân], which also was a part of the old Tukhâra territory. Here they remained, on account of the frost and snow, for a month and some days.

Again going south-east through the mountains about

1 Julien has "the castern bank."

200 h, they arrived at the kinglam of Ki po kin (Yang'in)

Still scing south-east through a mountainous and precip tens district for 300 h they arrived at the kingdom of Ku lang ra (Kurlu)

Gene north east from this acress the moun ains, for 500 h er ro, they came to the country of In-rio n he had (Tan whati) This country is alreed between two mountains londering on the Oxne. It produces excellent (alen) fore a small in growth but very strong. The people have no namers, and are of a passionate temperament and unsecrals are armes. The rayes are chiefly of a ble ish arcen tint different from all oth r people. There are ten his harman her. The car ital of the country are muned Hean to to in which there is a Sabelarima which a former ling of this country built. In this Sangharania is a stone figure of Buddha above which is a gilded corper entelet, ornamented with various some, it hange m sinux red over the head of Buddlin, and when men worship the mane and inve tot, the campy also moves with them, and when they stop it stops. No one can explain this spiritual product $

North from this country across some great mountains, there is the country of S i-I i-m (Shikhnan) *

A an crossing from Ta-mo-si-tie-ti we come to the country of Sharg mi (Simblit)

From this country, again going east across mountains 700 h, we reach the valley of Painr. This valley is about 1000 h from east to west, and 100 h or so from north to south. It has between two ranges of the Snowy Mountains. Moreover, this valley has as it were in the il e deep a a.

² Calle l also H e mil -Cl 1 L 2 Lake the pil sto e, the col ur of

Eitler my text is defective or tlat of M Julen was reli lant of Jelen 1 200

4 Is le Hecords ii 295
5 Tile passage is wrongly placed in

Tile passage is wrongly placed the French translation

midst of the T'sung-Ling Mountains, so that the wind and snow tempests fly to and fro during the spring and summer incessantly. The soil is always frozen, vegetation is scanty and rare, the seeds sown do not fructify, the whole district is desert and without inhabitants.

In the middle of this valley is a great lake, 200 li from east to west, and fifty li from north to south. It lies in the centre of Jambudvîpa, at an immense height. Regarding its watery expanse it extends beyond range of sight. The animals that dwell in it are of infinite variety; the noise of their ten thousand cries is like the tumult of a hundred workshops.

We see here, moreover, birds ten feet or so in height; eggs as large as a round water-jar, probably the same as were formerly called the Ku-koh (big shells) of the Tajiks (Tiu-chi).

From the western division of the lake proceeds a river, which, flowing to the west, reaches the eastern frontier of Ta-mo-si-ti where it unites with the Oxus, and flowing westward, enters the sea. All the rivers on the right, moreover, unite together in the same way.

From the eastern division of the lake a great river proceeds in the direction of the Kie-sha country (Kashgar), and on its western frontier unites with the Sitâ river, and flowing to the east enters the sea. All the streams on the left, likewise, unite in the same way.

Beyond the mountains which are to the south of the valley is the country of Po-lu-lo (Bolor) where there is much gold and silver; the gold is the colour of fire. This lake, moreover, is one with the Anavatapta lake, in its north and south direction.

Proceeding from the eastern side of this valley, scrambling over crags and precipices, and along roads covered with show for 500 h, they then reached the king lem of Kine-plan-to. The chief town of this country is finited by a high mountain peak, whilst on the north it is backed by the Sitä river. This river on the east enters the rea. Passing through the rall lake (Lake Lob) it flows underground, and emerging at the Tsih-shi mountain, it is the origin of our (Yiller) river.

¹ That is, the cyg-shell; probably of the ostrich.

The Ling of this country, from whom a long succession of rulers are:, was remarkable for his wisdom; it is said (or, he profer of) that he took his origin from Chinadiang trai (ix, the offspring of the Gol of China). In the old pulse of the Ling there is the Singhamma of the old Master Kumarajisa; this Mister was a man of the Takshifil's country. He was of great spiritual insernment and buffern reputation. Each day to repeated 32,000 words and also wrote others down. He delighted in pursuing his religious studies, he was elegant in composition, and was the author of many scores of Sástras, which gained a wide-spirad renown. He was the first master of the Sintrantika school.

At this time Asyaghosha flourished in the East, Deva in the South, Nag'rijuna in the West, Kunarajuva' in the North; there were called the four sine, able to enlighten all that lives. The renown of Kunaradabha had reached such a height that a former king himself attacked his country (Takshasila) that he might honour and cherish him.

South-east of the city 300 li or so, there is a great (reck life a) stone wall with two stone chambers in it, in caell of which there is an Arhat sitting in a profound (critice) state of cestasy; each of them sits upright and without movement: they look extremely emmeated, but without any appearance of bodily decay, although 700 years and more have passed (since they arrived at that condition).

¹ For some remarks on this name,

For Kumāralabdha,
 Read Kumāralabdha,

The Master of the Law remained in this country for twenty days or so, and then going north-east for five days he fell in with a band of robbers; the merchants, his companions, were panic-stricken and made for the mountains; the elephants being driven about in the pursuit, were engulfed in the water and perished.

The robbers having passed by, they all proceeded slowly to the eastward, over crags and across mountain gorges, descending the heights and patiently enduring the cold. After 800 li they emerged from the T'sungling mountains and reached the kingdom of U-sha (Och).

To the westward of the capital about 200 li there is a great mountain covered with crags and precipices; on the top of a very high peak is a Stûpa. The old story goes, that many hundred years ago, the thunder having shivered a mountain, in the midst of one of the denuded crags there was seen the body of a Bhikshu of an extraordinary size, who sat there with closed eyes, and his matted hair descending over his shoulders and his face. Some woodcutters having seen the sight, went and told the king; he went in person to witness it and to offer his adorations.

The news being spread abroad the people from far and near flocked together, all intent on offering him their religious devotions and heaping up flowers. After this was done, the king said: "What man is this?"

A certain Bhikshu answered and said: "This is an Arhat who, having left his family, entered on (a condition of) complete ecstasy. Since this occurred many years have elapsed, and therefore his hair has grown to such a length."

The king replied: "If you know how, cause him to arouse himself."

In reply ho said "In the case of one who has long gono without food, when he nwakes from his ecstasy his body would decay, so that first you must amount him with eream, which being rubbed into his body will lubricate and soften his muscles, then afterwards you must soun l the ghants (a metal gong) when he is stirred up and awakened he will perhaps rise up (from his test)"

The king answered 'Well spoken I" and according to the directions he anomited him with cream and then sounded the ahantd

The Arhat, then opening his eyes and looking around him and 'What sort of men are you, clothed with religious vestments?"

They replied. "We are Blinkelins"

He answered "Where now dwells my master Kasyapa Tathagata?"

Again they said "He has passed into Nirvana"

Hearing this he uttered a cry, and then rejoined. "Has Sikyr-Muni yet accomplished 'the unequalled condition of perfect enlightenment'?" (ie become a Buddha'

"Yes' they said, "and having procured benefit to the world he too has passed into Nirvana.

Having heard this he lowered his oychds, and after a time having with his hand raised his locks, he ascended from his place into the air and by his great spiritual power having caused his body to consume itself with fire, which appeared at his will, his bones fell to the ground as his bequeathed relics

The king and the great congregation collected the bones, and raised over them a Stûpa—and this is the one we are noticing.

Going north from this place 500 li or so, we come to the country of Kie-sha (Kashgar).¹

Going south-east from this place 500 li or so, and crossing the Sitâ river, they passed over a great mountain range and reached the kingdom of Cha-kiu-kia (Yar-kiang?).

To the south of this country there is a high mountain in which there are a number of niches like chambers; many men of India who have arrived at the fruit (of Bôdhi) by their spiritual power, transport themselves here to rest in peace, and a great many of these who have died here (obtained Nirvana).

At present there are three Arhats who dwell in a mountain cavern here, and have entered into the ecstasy of complete forgetfulness. As their hair and beards gradually grow longer, the priests from time to time go to the spot to cut them.

In this country are many Sûtras of the Great Vehicle; this literature includes many tens of works amounting to 100,000 ślokas.²

Going east from this 800 li or so, we come to the country of Kustana (Khotan). This district is a great flat covered with sand and stones. The soil, however, is fit for the cultivation of cereals and is very productive. They manufacture carpets (rugs) from wool, fine haircloth, and silken taffeta; the soil produces much white jade and dark jade. The climate is temperate, and the common people understand politeness and right principles, they esteem learning and are fend of music. They are upright in their conduct and truthful, and in these respects differ from other Tartar tribes (Hu) The r literature (letters) recembles that of India with some slight differences. They greatly esteem the law of Ruddha.

¹ The old name was Su-li (Sm 1) and so the city was called. The right sound, howover, was Shi-li-ki-li-to-li (Srihritati?); the way of writing it—Su-li, so commonly adopted—is wrong—Ch. Ld.

² It would seem from this (as I have remarked elsewhere) that the Great Vehicle system found its way into India, from Baktria.

There are 100 memsteries here and about 5000 priests They mostly study the Great Vehicle The king is a polished and learned man, brave and versed in the arts of war He is well affected towards virtuous people He professes to be descended from Petha-man (Vaistavana)

The great ancester of the king was the eldest son of Asoka ilia, who duck in Jakehasill. Afternards, being braished from the kincdem he went forth to the nerth of the Saewy Mountains As he went looking for grass and water for his herds, he came to this place and built his chief residence here

After a while, because he had ne son, he nent to wership in the Temple of Vaisravana Deva. The forehead of the god bursting open in front there came forth a male child and the ground fronting the temple, at the same time produced a wonderfully sweet-scented (mbstance like milk from the) breast, taking this for the nourishment of the child he grew up to maturity

At the lings death he isounted the throac and estriblished his rule in righteeusness, and brought many countries nader his power. The present king is his descendant As his ageestor had been nourished by a breast of the cartis the name of U tien (for Kustana) was given to it meaning an earth rap?

near which is a stone mammis multe ler b s pers m le p. 778 1 have tion a often thought ti at the celebrated ong a Comats Temple at Klotan was so

Or should it not be tlo se the callel from mother early facturers of the royal process. Lack the entire account but cusers of the royal process lact the ertire account but here of Pausan as also speaks of a found a nul in Hallen of the character of the Li otan people and their er list tion seems to point to a non It lian

When the Master of the Law entered the frontiers of this kingdom, he came to the city of Po-kia-i (Bhagpa?). In this is a sitting figure of Buddha about seven feet high; on its head is a precious jewel-crown, and its appearance is perfect and complete (for majesty). The old people gave the following account of it.

The image originally belonged to Kaśmir, and came to this place by invitation.

There was formerly an Arhat who had a Śrâmanêra (as a disciple) whose body was afflicted with leprosy. When he was near death he desired to have a cake of tsoh-mai (sour meal?). His master by means of his divine sight saw that such food could be got in Kustana. Accordingly he transported himself there by his power of Irrdhi, and having begged some, returned and gave it to the Śrâmanêra. Having eaten it he was filled with joy and desired to be born in that country. His earnest prayer could not be abortive, and so after his death he was born in the royal family.

After he had come to the throne, being sharp-witted and brave, he purposed to make a foray and seize some neighbouring territory. Crossing the mountains therefore he attacked the old country of his birth.

The king of Kaśmir accordingly chose his generals and marshalled his troops in order to repel the attack.

And now the Arhat said: "Do not attempt to use force: I myself will go to him."

Forthwith he went to the place where the king of Knstana was, and told him about the loss caused by the covetousness and violence of the head-born (Mûrdhaja) king; and then he showed him the garment he had worn when in his former person he had been a Śrâmanêra.

The king seeing it, and arriving at a knowledge of his former condition, was deeply ashamed, and forthwith formed an alliance with the king of Kaśmir, and remounced his purpose of conquest. Returning to his country, he was accompanied by (or, he received as a great) the mage which he had formuly worshipped and which now followed the army When the image arrived at this toot it stood still and would go no farther him; and all his army tried to move it forward by force. but it would not move. Accordingly the king raised above the image a little chapel, and invited the priests and their companyons to come and worship it. Moreover he placed on the head of Buddha (se the image) his own much-valued and magnificent head-dress. This head-dress is still to be seen, and is of priceless value on account of the revels, all beholders are filled with explication at the at ht.

The Master of the Law remained here seven days

The king of Khotan hearing that the Master was cutering his territories, went forth in his own person to me t lum, and the following day he conducted him on lus was

The Luig, arriving at his capital in advance, left his ron to attend (the Master)

After proceeding thus for two days the king further despretched an official guide (ta I rean) to conduct him on his onward way.

When forty h from the town he rested for the night The next day the king, with a number of clerics and laymen, Inking with them sounding music, perfunce, and flowers, accompanied him along the road on the left side . on his arrival his invited hun to enter the city, and located him in a temple of the Little Vehicle, belonging to the school of the Sarvista Idans

About ten li to the south of the city, there is a large Sangharama which was built by a former king of this country in honour of Vairochana Arhat.

Formerly, when this country had not yet received the benefit of the teaching of the Law, an Arhat came here from Kaśmir, and sat down in silent meditation in the midst of a forest.¹

¹ For an original and compendious ride Rockhill, "The Life of the are unt of the history of khotan Buddha cap you

Some persons who saw him were frightened at his appearance and clothing.

Having told the king about it, he came in person to examine his appearance.

He then asked him who he was, living thus in the midst of a solitary wilderness.

He answered: "I am a disciple of Tathagata; his law enjoins on me this solitary abode."

The king replied: "When you speak of Tathagata, whom do you mean?"

He answered and said: "Tathagata is the distinctive title of Buddha. He was in former days the eldest son of Suddhódana-râja, his name being Sarvârthasiddha; moved by tenderness for "all flesh" engulfed in the sea of sorrow, without a teacher and without any refuge, he rejected the seven gems belonging to a Chakravarttin, and the 1000 sons, and the sovereignty over the four continents (quarters, or islands), and in the solitary forest earnestly sought after wisdom (Bôdhi); having obtained the fruit of his six years' discipline, his body yellow as gold, he reached the law which is acquired without a Master. He scattered sweet dew (i.e., preached on the deathless condition of Nirvana) in the garden of deer, and caused the brightness of the Mani-gem to shine on the summit of the Ghridrakûta (i.e., declared the highest truth). For eighty years he published his doctrine for the profit and happiness (of all creatures). His connection with (conditioned) life being now broken, he peacefully passed away to the true condition of being, leaving his image and his body of doctrine as a perpetual legacy, and these still survive.

¹ The Tsu-la grove, op. cit., p. 237. The word in our text, however, may mean "the wilderness,"

1 / 2001

"And now the king by his meritorious conduct in previous states of life has established himself as n rule; of men, he ought therefore to take chingo of and enjoin obedience to, this religious system (wheel of the law), that those who understand its jurport may find in it their solvation (refuge). But why are you so dumb, as though you heard me not?"

The king replied "My sins, accumulated and overflowing, have prevented ine from henring the name of Buddha But now, thanks to the downpouring virtue of the holy man, what remnant of ment I have has accured to my benefit May I be allowed to adore his image and obey the doctrino he has bequeathed to the world?

The Arint replied 'You must seek the joy of fulfilling your rows First then build a Sangharum, then the divine image will of itself descend'

On this the king returned, and with his various ministers having selected a suitable site and having summoned his workmen, he asked the Arhat for a plan of the building to be raised. He then proceeded with the work

When, the temple was finished, the Ling further inquired, "The Strighfruma is completed, but where is the statue of Buddhn?

He replied 'Let the king only seek the fullest assumnce (rasight) and the image will come forthwith"

On this the king and all the great ministers and the gentry and people lighting their meense and scattering flowers stood still in profound meditation, in n moment the image of Buddha came down from space with its

¹ This may also be translited if you turn a deaf ear to my (or his)
What can be said (of your wisdom) words precious daïs, glittering and bright, and of a majestic appearance.

The king seeing it, was filled with joy, and congratulated himself on his extreme good fortune. Moreover, he requested the Arhat to preach the Law for the benefit of the people. Then, because he instituted for the people (or, among the people) a festival of dedication, this Sangharama is (remembered as) the very first foundation in the country.

The Master of the Law, since he had previously lost his books in crossing the river, when he came here, immediately sent messengers to go to Kuchi and to Su-li (Kashgar), to seek for others; and now, notwithstanding his delay with the king of Khotan, as they had not obtained the books, he sent forward a young man of Kau-chang with a written memorial, desiring him to follow in the train of the merchants, and to present it at court, with the tidings that he who had formerly gone to the country of the Brâhmans to seek for the Law, had now returned so far as Khotan.

The memorial was couched in these words: "The words of the Śramaṇa Hiuen-Tsiang: Hiuen has heard say of Ma-yung, Ki-chen, and Ching-Huan, that they were teachers of public morals: Fuh-sing was illustrious for his eminent talent: Cho-T'so himself (founded) the schools to the south of the Tsih. Here we see the character of these learned men But if we admire these ancient masters for thus going afar in search (or, support of) learning, how much more those who search into the secret traces of the profit-bringing religion of the Buddhas, and the marvellous words of the three Piṭakas, able to liberate from the snares of the world? How can we dare to undervalue such labours, or not regard them with ardour? Now I, Hinch-lain, long since versed in the doctrue of Buddha bequeathed by hun in the Western world the rules and precents of which had reached the Last in an imperfect form, nlways pondered on a plan for searching out the true learning, without any thought for personal safety Accordingly, in the fourth mouth of the third year of the p rood Cheng-Kwan (630 AD) I raving dangers and obstacks I secretly found my way to India I travers d over vast plans of shifting sand I scale I precipitous mountain crags elad with snow found my way through the scarped passes of the iron gates, passed along by the timultuous waves of the hot sea. Regimning at the sacred city of Changan, I reached the new city of Ranariha.

Vide Mayers' Manual, No. 479.
 Op. cit., No. 59.

³ Op. cit., No. 147. ⁴ Op. cit., No. 97.

"Thus I accomplished a journey of more than 50 000 h, yet, notwithstanding the thousand differences of ensdan ers I have encountered by the goodness of Herven I have returned without accident, and now offer my home, with a body unimparted, and a muid satisfied with the accomplishment of my vows 1 have beheld the Ghridral úta Mountain, worshipped at the Bodhi tree I have seen traces not seen before, heard sacred words not heard before, witnessed spiritual prodigies, exceeding all the wonders of Nature, have borne testimony to the high qualities of our nugust Emperor, and wou for hun the high esteem and praise of the people. In my travels through successive kingdoms I have passed s venteen years and now, having come from the country of Praya, a, passed through Kapisi, surmounted the precipices of the Tsung Ling, traversed the valley of Panur. I have reached Khotan

And now, because the great elephant (which I had) is perished in the waters, I have not yet succeeded in obtaining transport for the numerous books which I have I rought back On that account I have remained here a little while; but not having obtained (even here) the necessary mode of conveyance, I purpose at once to go forward and visit your majesty. With this view I have sent forward a layman belonging to Kau-Chang, whose name is Ma-huan-chi, in the company of certain merchants, respectfully to present this letter, and to announce my purpose."

After this, during a day and a night, he explained to the priests of Khotan the principles of the Yôga, the Abhidharma, the Kosha, and the Mahayana-samparigraha-Sastras.

The king with the clergy and lay-people all sought to do honour to his teaching, and many thousands embraced. the faith daily.

Seven or eight months having elapsed, the messenger returned with a gracious message from the king, to this effect: "When I heard that the Master who had gone to far-off countries to search for religious books, had now come back, I was filled with joy without bounds. I pray you come quickly, that we may see each other. The priests of this kingdom who understand the Fan 1 language and the explanation of the sacred books, I have also commanded to come and pay you greeting. I have ordered the bureaux of Khotan 2 and other places to send with you the best guides they can procure, and conveyances as many as you require. I have commanded the magistrates of Tun-wang to conduct you through the desert of shifting sands, and I have desired the Shen-Shen (government) to send to meet you at Tso-moh."

¹ The sacred language of India (Julien). But it cannot be confined to the Sanscrit, as Mr. Alwis supposes (Lecture ii. p. 50), because Fa-hien speaks of the Buddhist books in ⁽op. cit. p. 231, n.) we may gather that Khotan at this time was subject to the king of Kan-chang.

^{*} Unless indeed, as Mr. Foulkes seems to suppose, the books which Fa-hien procured in Coylon were written in Sanscrit (vide Indian Antiq., May 1888, p. 124, c. 1).

The Master of the Law having respectfully received this letter of instructions, forthwith set forward. The king of Khotan provided him with a large store of provisions.

Having cone 300 h or so from the capital, eastward, he teached the town of Pi-me! In this city is a sandalwood innee of Buddler in a standing position. It is thuty feet high, and is of a grave and majestic appear-It has great spiritual virtue, insomuch that men who are afflicted with any bodds hart, if according to the place so affected, they place some gold leaf on the corresponding part of the image, they are namediately restored. The e who pay their yous to this mage and make request for any favour are mostly successful. The old tradition goes that when Buddlin was formerly alive in the world. Udivan i-iair, of Kaufambl made this image. After the Nirvana of Buddhr it came flying of its own accord to the north of this country, and located itself in the city of Ho-lo-lo-kia (Right or Urgha !). Her this it again transported itself to this place. The signing is, that according to tradition, when the religion of Sikya is destroyed, this image will enter the Dragon palace

Leaving the town of Pi-mo and proceeding eastward, we caller the desert of sand and stone. Going 200 h we reach the town of Ni-jang. Fistward of this again is the desert of drifting sainh, without water or vegetation, birming hot, and subject to the earl of poisonous fiends and imps. There is no road, and travellers in coming and going have only to look for the deserted bones of men and cattle as their ginde. We have before described the arid and toilsome character of this desert journey.

Again going 100 li or so, we reach the old country of Tukihat. Six lunadred li further on we come to the old country of Che-mo-l'o-ma, which is the same as the Ni-me territory.

¹ Pimá, vide Records, ii 322 2 Records, ii p 324, 1 P 324.

Again going north-east 1000 li or so we come to the old country of Na-fo-po, which is the same as the territory of Leu-lan.¹

From this, after various détours, we arrive at the borders of China. Having obtained conveyances the Master then sent back to Khotan the messengers and their horses and camels. They returned therefore, having declined to accept the recompense awarded them for their services.

Having reached Sha-chow, he forwarded a memorial (to the Emperor). The Emperor was then residing in his palace at Lo-yang. On receiving the letter he learned that Hiuen-Tsiang was gradually approaching: he then commanded Fong-huan-ling, duke of the kingdom of Liang, of the titular rank Tso-po-she, who had been left as governor of the western capital (Si-gan-fu), to despatch proper officers to go forth and conduct (the Master of the Law).

The Master, understanding that the Emperor desired to question him as to his fault in leaving the country without permission, wished to avoid any delay in his arrival, and therefore pressed forward on his march with haste, and arrived by way of the canal.

The magistrates not knowing the routine of polite reception and escort, were unable to make the necessary preparations; but the news spreading fast, the people came together of their own accord in vast numbers to behold and pay their homage to the Master. The streets were so crowded that when he wished to disembark, he could not advance for the crush, and so he passed the night on the canal.

¹ That is, Shen-shen.

CONCLUSION.

Having discrib the?, Hinen-Ts ing was excepted to the western capital (Signal-fu), where he arrived in the same of the year 645 and

On the day following, the members of the various measureries conducted Himen-Tennig, with flags and bishers, to the convent cilled Hong-fu (extensee kappings). He here deposited the treasures he had brought from India, viz. —

- t. One hundred and fifty particles of flesh farinas, of the Tail firsts
- 2. One golden statue of Buddha (according to the pattern of) the shadow left in the Dragon cave of the Pragl folia Mountain in the kingdom of Magadha, also a plattering pedestal 3 ft. 3 in high. This figure resembles the image of Buddha as he is turning the wheel of the Law 2 in the decr-park at Banaras.
- 3 A sandal-wood figure of Buddha with a shining pedestal 3 lt. 5 in high, after the model of the sandal-wood figure made according to the hkeness drawn by the desire of Udâyana, king of Kausambi, when he was longing for (the return of) Tailungata.
- 4. A figure of Buddha with a shining pedestal 2 ft, 9 in high, after the model of the figure of Tathagata,

The nineteenth year of the period of Cheng kwan, 646 A.D (Mayers).

That is, presching

when he descended on the jewelled ladder from the heavenly palace to the country of Kapitha.

- 5. A silver figure of Buddha with a translucent pedestal. 4 ft. high, after the model of Buddha delivering the Saddharma-pundarîka and other Sûtras on the Ghridrakûţa Mountain, in Magadha.
- 6. A figure of Buddha with a translucent pedestal, 3 ft. 5 in. high, after the model of the figure of his shadow, which he left in the country of Nagarahâra, in the place where he subdued the poisonous dragon.
- 7. A sandal-wood figure of Buddha with a translucent pedestal, I ft. 3 in. high, after the model of a similar figure representing Buddha as he went round the city of Vaisali on his work of conversion.

He also deposited in this temple the books of the Great Vehicle, which he had brought from the West, including 224 Sûtras, 192 Śâstras, 15 works of the Sthavira 3 school, including Sûtras, Vinaya, and Sastras; the same number belonging to the Sammatiya school; 22 works of the same character belonging to the Mahîsâsaka school; 67 books of the same character belonging to the Sarvâstîvâdin school; 17 works of the same character belonging to the Kâśyapîya school; 42 works of the same character belonging to the Dharmagupta school; 36 copies of the Hetuvidyâ śâstra; 13 copies of the Śabdavidyâ śâstra; altogether 520 fasciculi, comprising 657 distinct volumes, carried upon twenty horses.

After having visited the chief officers of the western capital, the Emperor being at Lo-yang, the Master promisprint for pih, the number being 192 instead of 92.

3 Julien has throughout his traks-

¹ Julien has 124.
² Julien (whose copy appears here to have been defective) has lun-i-yen, where the symbol yen is evidently a lation substituted Sarrastivadas for Sthaviras.

cee'el to that town, and lad an intersion with the sorce on. He was received with the graciest attention in the Liwan ladice. Being a stell the Liperor asked him who he had gone from home will out consulting him. He replied that he had seen three requests for permission to leave the country previous to his departure, but having received no answers haves unable to restrain his disminant accordingly left without the desired permission.

After a lengthered conversion. Hinen-Terms having declined to accept a signal fife retired to the monatery of Hong form 's you for each there began his work of translation.

At the conclusion of the very 647 AD he had completed the trinslation of the (1) Bodhustus-purka-Sútra, (2) Budhus-bhúnn-Sútra (3) Shapunkhi dhérani and others

By the end of the year 648 he had completed in all fifty eight books including the Si-ju-ki (undertaken at the Lippers express compand)

In the year 649 the Imperor caused Huen Tsiang to take up his residence in the Secten Temple? Here he continued the worl of translation until his death

In the year 650 AD the Imperor I at Ising thed and was succeeded by Kao-Ising

I row this time the Master of the Law devoted himself with earnest resolution to the work of translation. He rose every morning at dawn of day, and after a slight repast devoted four hours to the explanation of the Sacred Books. And being in charge of the Monastery he had regard to the discipline of the resident monks.

LTI e Palace of the Phoneix
This is the Femple of Great Benevoleace from which the Chi ese
the of the work we have before us is taken

Upwards of 100 disciples daily attended his lectures; and notwithstanding his manifold occupations, he showed the same energy in his work as he had exhibited from the first. He discoursed largely on the various systems of the schools and the distinguished Masters of the West, so that the princes and ministers who came to listen to his discourses, frequently expressed their admiration and respect for his eminent talent.

In the year 652 A.D. the Master of the Law caused a pagoda (Feou-to) to be constructed at the southern gate of the Hong-fuh temple, in which he finally deposited his sacred books and images for safety. The total height of this structure was 180 ft. It was built after the model of the Indian Stûpas, and had five stages—surmounted by a cupola. In the highest storey on the southern side, there was a chamber constructed, in which were preserved copies of the two prefaces composed by the former Emperor and the Prince Royal, to the volumes translated by Hiuen-Tsiang.

In the year 654 a deputation from the Mahâbôdhi Temple in Central India visited the Master and conveyed to him the assurances of the high esteem in which he was held. Hiuen-Tsiang replied, acknowledging the honour conferred upon him, and requesting that the books he had lost in crossing the Indus might be replaced by others from India.

During the years 655 A.D. and 656 A.D. the Master continued the task of translating his books: he suffered from an old malady contracted in crossing the mountains of India, but by the help of the physicians sent to him from the court he partly recovered. In the year 658 the Master returned from Lo-yang to the western capital, in the suite of the Emperor, and took up his residence in the newly constructed temple cilled Si-ming. Here he remained until signs of advancing age caused him some mixiety less he should be muchle to translate the Print (paramita) works With the view of entering on this task he requested the Emperor's permis ion to retire to the Yuh fa (gem flower) pulsee and there in quietness to prepare for this translation. In 650 he moved into this prlace, and in 660 began the new The Indian copy of the Mahi pruna piramith Sutra consisted of 200 000 $lokas, he purposed to produce an abridged translation, int was warned by a dream not to do so The Master had procured three copies of this work in India, and ho at once proceeded to collate these with a view to correct the text from which he translated. He was now sixty-five years of age, and feeling that his end was noar he worked without interruption in order to finish his task before ho died

Ho completed his labours in the 10th month of the year Lung So (661 AD) The entire work of the Mahâ prajid păramită Sûtra consists of 600 chapters in 102 vols

Having declined to undertake the translation of the Ratin Latin Sutra, he composed himself to await his end He had now finished the translation of soventy-four distinct works, in 1335 chapters. He had, moreover, made a vast number of pictures and written out with his own hands copies of various Sutras. When the recital of all these works was finished, he closed his eyes and by perfectly still. Having now repeated some verses in adopation of Maitreya¹ he gradually sank until the day of his death, in the 10th month, 13th day, of the year 664.

The earnest desire of Hiuen Maitreys, of course is the future Ts ang was to behold Maitreys and Beddha, and represents the character dwell with him in the Tusita-beaven of Love

He was buried in the Western capital, but in the year 669 his remains were removed by order of the Emperor to a space situated to the north of the valley of Fan-chuen, where a tower was constructed to his memory.

THE END.

